Bonar Hall, looking today much as it has since it was remodeled in the 1880's, is a two-story, brick residence in the late-Georgian style. The large garden with its years of growth is as important as the house and original outbuildings. The main house is a cube placed upon the center of a central axis with outbuildings (kitchen, pergola, orangery, privies) radiating from that axis to form a square with the orangery and pergola flanking the house and the kitchen in the immediate rear. The boxwood garden and towering specimen trees lie to the left of the lawn.

trans

According to the date on the gutter-head, the house was built in 1832. The present day facade has, rather than its original Doric portico, a lacy white two-storied Victorian veranda, repeated in a single story at the side. This porch was added in the 1880's and at that time the parapet balustrade which ran along the roof edge was removed and a porch doorway was opened on the upper level, eliminating the center windows. The exterior is of plantation-made red brick with traces of the original mortar penciling. The twin chimneys in the gable ends are reminiscent of Independence Hall. A transcept and side lights frame the front doorway which is severely Greek Revival.

The interior is also in this planar Greek style. An academic plan with two rooms on each side of a central hallway running from front to rear is on both floors. Silver-plated hardware enriches the otherwise rather austere interiors, particularly the woodwork which is Asher Benjamin at his simplest. Several pieces of furniture and various heirlooms still survive from the original furnishings, some of which are placed as they have been for 70 years or more.

The house with accompanying structures set in a formalized gardenscape is a picture of classical symmetry. Plans are presently underway to remove the Victorian verandas and reconstruct the original Doric portico and balustraded parapet above the cornice line. Good photographs of Bonar Hall prior to the Victorian remodeling fortunately survive.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Bonar Hall is an important survivor of Georgia plantation life. When built in 1832 by John Byne Walker it was a nucleus for his vast Morgan County cotton plantation; today the estate has been reduced to 100 acres and serves as a private residence on the outskirts of Madison. The beautiful landscaping developed by the original owners is one of the few surviving mid-19th century gardens in the state.

Walker built the brick Georgian style manor house for his bride Elizabeth S. Fannin in 1832. Remaining in the Walker family until 1880, Bonar Hall was then purchased by John A. Broughton. It was during this ownership that the Victorian verandas replaced the original Doric portico. Bonar Hall changed hands several more times before 1920 when it was purchased by Mr. and Mrs. W.T. Bacon and returned to one branch of the original family. Miss Therese Newton, Mrs. Bacon's daughter, presently owns the home and plans to restore it to its original appearance.

One of Bonar Hall's most outstanding features is its boxwood garden. Planted by Eliza Fannin Walker over the objections of her husband, John Byne Walker, the formal garden and orchards contained rare shrubs, flowers and trees many of which survive from that original planting. Among the more unusual are the cork oaks, mock oranges, yews and several varieties of magnolias. Fragrant cedars, catalpa trees, quinces and quincydonias are also found. A once flourishing water garden has since disappeared. It is believed that Walker engaged an English landscape architect to lay out the final plan of the garden. An extensive list of the original surviving plantings, published in The Garden History of Georgia, illustrates the importance of Bonar Hall's gardens to the state. Standing on the old Sandtown Road, it is an important architectural landmark in a town with many such monuments, none of which surpass Bonar Hall in significance.
