The Lewis Ainsworth House is located on the south side of the 400 Block of East Chapman Avenue in Orange, California. Although surrounded to the east and west by modern office buildings of one or two story height, the house is situated within one of the most historic portions of the City of Orange. It stands within four blocks of the Plaza, a property listed in the National Register, and one block from the pending National Register Orange Plaza Historic District.

The Ainsworth House is a wood frame structure with a foundation of simulated stone concrete block. It was built in 1910 when the bungalow was beginning to become popular. The Ainsworth House is symmetrical in design on the exterior and in the interior floor plan. It has a distinct formality due to its geometry and has an interesting arrangement of three medium gables over the front veranda. Each gable contains a small window and flanking louvered attic vents in a Palladian manner. The veranda is broad, gracious and curved over the entrance steps. Two sets of concrete steps, $\frac{1}{4}$ circular in plan, lead from the two entrances on the veranda to paired sidewalks leading to the street. At the top of the veranda posts is ornate scroll work which is sheet metal made to resemble wood; this is an unusual feature for such a building in Orange County. The remainder of the trim is reserved and in keeping with the formality of the building. With the exception of two later rooms added in the rear, now removed, the house has remained essentially unchanged over the years.

The interior of the house reflects the geometric formality of the exterior. The six rooms are arranged with two in the middle flanked by the other four. The front middle room is connected to the side from two rooms by sliding doors. The attic space within the roof is quite substantial.

The Ainsworth House is currently owned by the City of Orange, and a citizens' committee has been established to oversee the building's restoration as a representative of 1910 Orange and as a community museum. This effort was set back with the theft of the original doors, cut window glass, and birds-eye maple fireplace mantel. However, replacements have either duplicated the lost items or they have been replaced with items compatible with the 1910 date. The wood shingle roof has been recently replaced since the older one was in a deteriorated state. A flagpole has been added in front of the house.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The seventy year-old Ainsworth House is significant to the broad patterns of local history in the areas of commerce, settlement and architecture. It is directly associated with a person important in the early 20th century development of the local business community, is a remnant of a settlement pattern exemplified by economic growth on the edge of the original community core around the Orange Plaza, and is a notable example of early 20th century residential architecture in the bungalow mode by the owner's artist daughter.

Commerce

The significance in this category is based upon the building's association with its original owner, Lewis Ainsworth. Samuel Armor, in his History of Orange County, commented about Ainsworth: "He was a builder and an upbuilder to the city and county ... A prominent businessman of Orange, whose healthy influence was felt far beyond the confines of both county and state." Born in Vermont in 1829, Ainsworth's life reads as a relentless search for financial betterment. After moving to Iowa with his parents, he participated in the 1849 California Gold Rush, crossing the plains that year in an ox-team train. Thereafter, he made a number of trips via Panama to the East and Midwest. The 1860's saw Ainsworth engaged in a lumber and mining business in Trinity County, California. From 1869 to 1888 he pursued farming enterprises in Iowa and Kansas. In the 1890's, he founded the Ainsworth Bank with his sons at Glasco, Kansas. In these later years, Ainsworth had been spending his winters in California. In 1900 he settled permanently in Orange, and again with his sons. orgainized the Ainsworth Lumber and Milling Company, the first planing mill in Orange. He built the Ainsworth Building on the Plaza Square in 1905. He was a stockholder in the First National Bank of Orange and the Orange Savings Bank. Ainsworth lived at this address from 1910 until his death on March 22, 1914, at the age of 84. He left an estate valued at an estimated $90,000.

Settlement

The house reflects the "post-pioneer" period of settlement in Orange's history. The pioneer period begins in 1870 with the survey of the town of Orange and lasts through the famous Southern California land boom of the 1880's. With the city's incorporation in 1888, any doubt as to the community's permanent character had come to an end. With well-established railroad and other transportation links, organized schools and a library along with the growing citrus industry, the elements were in place for the consolidation and steady growth of the post-pioneer period. The Ainsworth House, through its association with Lewis Ainsworth and location in the zone of early expansion from the old community centered upon the Orange Plaza, remains as an artifact of its time in an area now largely replaced by modern development.

Architecture

The Ainsworth House bridges the transition from Victorian to Bungalow residential construction. Its horizontal emphasis and simple, functional design shows the increasing popularity of the bungalow. Some Colonial Revival elements have also been incorporated into the design. However, the treatment of the veranda and its filagreed metalwork. as well as other elements, indicates that the Victorian era still remained in the mind of the home's designer. The designer was the daughter of Lewis Ainsworth. Ina Ainsworth Butler. She was known to be an artist and is said to have won prizes for her work at the 1893 Chicago World's Fair. Little is known of her work, although the citizens' restoration committee is searching for examples. Mrs. Butler apparently sought to capture in her house design the simplicity of the bungalow without rejecting the Victorian age in which her father had lived and contributed. The house remains a strong example of the early 20th century domestic architecture of the City of Orange. Its restoration will provide the public direct access to an important link with the community's past.
