Section number 7 Page 1 NORTH SHORE HISTORIC DISTRICT
PINELLAS COUNTY, FLORIDA
DESCRIPTION

SUMMARY

The North Shore Historic District (also known as the Old Northeast Neighborhood) represents one of the most extensive and eclectic mixtures of residential architecture in the city of St. Petersburg. It comprises early to mid-twentieth century houses and apartment buildings interspersed with 1950s era and later infill construction. This district includes a high percentage of architectural styles that typify the Florida Land Boom era of the 1920s and that reflect the broad settlement patterns of the city of St. Petersburg. It encompasses approximately 425 acres and contains a variety of residential architectural styles, including Frame Vernacular, Masonry Vernacular, Classical Revival, Colonial Revival, Craftsman/Bungalow, Prairie, Mediterranean Revival, Minimal Traditional, Mission, Tudor Revival, Ranch, Art Moderne, and Monterey. The contributing resources in the district consists of one- and two-story residences built between c. 1910 and c. 1950. Of the 3,489 buildings in the district, 2,975 are contributing and 514 are noncontributing, a ratio of 77 percent contributing to 23 percent noncontributing. Of the contributing buildings, 1,305 (43 percent) represent garages or garage apartments. In addition to the residential buildings, the district also contains three landscaped traffic circles (plazas) and four contributing objects: two pergolas, an urn, and a fountain. Noncontributing buildings include those that were erected prior to 1950 that have lost their historic physical integrity through alterations made less than fifty years ago and those that were constructed after 1950.

SETTING

The city of St. Petersburg is located on the west coast of central Florida, in Pinellas County, at the south end of the Pinellas Peninsula, which separates Tampa Bay from the Gulf of Mexico. Other communities found on the peninsula, like Clearwater, Largo, Pinellas Park, and Gulfport, have grown with St. Petersburg to form an almost continuous urban landscape. St. Petersburg and its surrounding communities are part of the St. Petersburg/Tampa metropolitan area which has a population of more than 2,000,000 residents. The city is connected to Tampa and its environs by bridges across the bay, and to Bradenton and Sarasota by the twin span, 15 mile Sunshine Skyway Bridge across Tampa Bay and a part of the Gulf of Mexico. St. Petersburg has a subtropical climate and is principally a resort and residential city. The economy depends largely on tourism through visitors to the many beaches along St. Petersburg's 33 miles of waterfront. Focal points of downtown tourist activity are Bayfront Auditorium and the Municipal Pier, both of which are located on Tampa Bay.

The North Shore Historic District is located north of downtown St. Petersburg on relatively high and well-drained land that slopes toward the water. It is bounded on the west by the 4th Street commercial area, on the east by Coffee Pot Bayou and Tampa Bay, on the north by 30th Avenue, and on the south by 5th Avenue. The dominant geographic theme is the waterfront, as virtually all areas of the neighborhood are in close proximity to the shores of either Tampa Bay or Coffee Pot Bayou.

Section number 7 Page 2 NORTH SHORE HISTORIC DISTRICT
PINELLAS COUNTY, FLORIDA

PHYSICAL DESCRIPTION

The district consists of 160 partial or complete blocks. With the exception of Granada Terrace, subdivisions within the current neighborhood, as originally platted, consist of a network of parallel streets and avenues with associated alleys. Today, the street and block pattern maintains the same configuration as the original plats, and many of the streets and alleys retain the red brick paving original to the neighborhood. (Photos 1-2). A total of sixteen north-south streets and twenty-six east-west avenues traverse the neighborhood which is laid out on a rectangular grid system, except along the meandering waterfront (Photo 3) and within the Granada Terrace subdivision. It is connected via several major thoroughfares, including North Shore Drive Northeast and Beach Drive on the eastern edge and 4th Street on the western perimeter. The primary internal arteries are 1st Street, 9th Avenue, 22nd Avenue, Beach Drive, and Locust Street. Today, five non-historic entry monuments mark the major gateways into the neighborhood: the Snell Isle Bridge, 22nd Avenue, Beach Drive, and 1st Street (Photo 4). All of these structures lie outside the boundaries of the of the historic district.

The district is primarily composed of single family residences on single lot parcels (Photo 5). The majority of the houses within the district are owner occupied, particularly in that area north of 9th Avenue. In addition to the residences, a substantial number of outbuildings, including garages and garage apartments, exist (Photos 6 and 7). The neighborhood reflects the early influence of automobiles through its original garage outbuildings that architecturally complement the main houses. Garage entrances are relegated to parallel alleys located to the rear of the house, and many of these original garages remain with only minor modifications (Photos 8 and 9). The district also maintains many features of the original streetscape such as brick streets, granite curbs, hexagonal block sidewalks, and lush landscaping (Photos 10, 11, 12, and 13). Many of these elements remain in good to excellent condition. Contributing apartment buildings also exist within the district (Photos 14, 15, and 16), as well as four contributing objects, three of which are associated with the Granada Terrace subdivision. These resources include the Plaza Andalusia Pergola, the Granada Vista Pergola, and the Plaza Valencia Urn located within small parks with tropical landscaping (Photos 17, 18, and 19). The fourth contributing object consists of a fountain located at 2800 1st Street North (Photo 20).

Present Appearance

The North Shore District, which represents the largest and most intact residential neighborhood in St. Petersburg, developed from its southern perimeter (5th Avenue) northward. More than two dozen different subdivision plats and re-plats are recorded in the county record books, but today the entire neighborhood is called North Shore. The largest plat in the neighborhood is Snell and Hamlett's North Shore subdivision, which along with Granada Terrace, contains some of the most distinctive residential buildings in the city. Examples include the Classical Revival style home located at 836 16th Avenue Northeast, the Mediterranean Revival style residence situated at 1400 Beach Drive Northeast, the Georgian style residence located at 201 14th Avenue North, and the Renaissance Revival style house located at 206 25th Avenue North (Photos 21, 22, 23, and 24).

NORTH SHORE HISTORIC DISTRICT
PINELLAS COUNTY, FLORIDA
DESCRIPTION

The buildings in the North Shore District exhibit a variety of forms and styles dating from the c. 1910-1945 time period. The majority of the outbuildings reflect the style characteristics of the main structure on the property. The most common styles include Frame Vernacular and Bungalow, which account for 26 percent and 25 percent of the buildings, respectively. Other prevalent styles include Prairie (11 percent), Georgian (13 percent), Mediterranean Revival (8 percent), and Masonry Vernacular (5 percent).

The earliest intact subdivisions in the North Shore neighborhood date from the 1890s and are located in a two block area south of 9th Avenue. This region contains almost all of the buildings constructed before 1913. Over thirty subdivisions were platted between 1910 and 1917. The most significant include Snell & Hamlett's North Shore and Bayview additions (1910), Erastus A. Barnard's subdivision (1910), North Bay Heights (1912), Jackson's subdivision (1912), and Colonial Heights (1917). By 1918, most of the areas were subdivided, but few buildings had been constructed. The remaining major subdivision was Perry Snell's Granada Terrace, which was platted in 1924. Granada Terrace, which fronts Coffee Pot Bayou, features a Spanish theme, curvilinear streets, circular and oblong green spaces, and decorative landscape structures. The residences located at 2320 Andalusia Way Northeast and 2326 Andalusia Way Northeast represent the Mediterranean Revival typical of this subdivision (Photos 25 and 26). Both are considered to be contributing features of the neighborhood.

A total of 109 existing buildings in the neighborhood were constructed between 1914 and 1918. The dominant architectural styles of these early subdivisions were Frame Vernacular, Masonry Vernacular, and Craftsman/Bungalow. Many of the early residences in the neighborhood are simple one-story and two-story wood frame vernacular structures. An interesting example of the Frame Vernacular style is located at 195 23rd Avenue North (Photo 27). This two-story house features a cross-gable extension with a louvered vent, a side-gable roof, an offset entrance, and a porch with simple columns. The windows consist of double-hung sash and the exterior decoration is minimal.

Another early Frame Vernacular house is located at 940 Locust Street NE (Photo 28). This one-story house features a steeply-pitched gabled roof with a louvered vent and a cross-gable extension. Windows are double hung, and the house has an offset entrance. The original porch is now enclosed with wooden double-hung windows; but this enclosure also appears to be historic.

The largest amount of building construction took place during the Florida Land Boom years of the 1920s. More than 1,000 buildings in the neighborhood date to this period. Dominant architectural styles include Bungalow, Prairie, Frame Vernacular, Colonial Revival, and Mediterranean Revival. Also associated with the 1920s Land Boom period are a number of Tudor Revival, Renaissance Revival, and Classical Revival residences.

DESCRIPTION

A substantial number of the residences in the neighborhood exhibit the Craftsman/Bungalow influence. The most common type of house to which this style was applied was the one-story and one and a half story residence. An ornate and interesting example is the residence located at 806 18th Avenue Northeast (Photo 29). The low roof pitch of this one-and-one-half story building emphasizes the horizontal intent of the design. The exterior wall fabric consists of wood shingle and brick mixed with concrete fragments set in a random pattern. An entrance porch extends from the facade and features decorative trusswork, truncated columns, and massive piers. A prominent end chimney rises from the west side of the building. Another example of a less elaborate two-story Bungalow is located at 445 11th Avenue Northeast (Photo 30).

Examples of undecorated and simple Bungalow influenced residences common throughout the neighborhood include those located at 325 19th Avenue Northeast and 526 16th Avenue Northeast (Photos 31 and 32).

The residence at 535 20th Avenue Northeast represents the Prairie style (Photo 33). This building exhibits a basic rectangular main unit with two one-story extensions. The roofs exhibit a low pitch with wide overhanging eaves. Paired brackets, while not a common element associated with this style, extend from the center of the facade. Pairs of double-hung sash windows flank the main entrance. The same type of window pierces the facade above the porch. Other examples of the Prairie style include the residences located at 125 8th Avenue Northeast and 245 8th Avenue Northeast (Photo 34 and 35).

Frame Vernacular houses are found throughout the neighborhood. A particularly notable example is the house located at 635 17th Avenue Northeast (Photo 36), because of its association with Babe Ruth, who occupied in the house during the 1920s when the New York Yankees baseball team did their Spring Training in the Tampa Bay area. Another vernacular building associated with the team, and which is unique in the North Shore Historic District, is a one-story log building located at 740 14th Avenue NE (Photo 37). This building, which sits on the back of the lot on the alley and is partially obscured by dense vegetation, served as the Yankee clubhouse during the 1920s.

Another Frame Vernacular house typical of those found throughout the neighborhood is located at 206 8th Avenue North (Photo 38). This two-story frame house features a low hip roof with a central gable vent and a wide veranda, now enclosed as a screened porch

An example of a Colonial Revival house is located at 300 8th Avenue Northeast (Photo 39). This frame building consists of a center block plan with a west wing. The gabled roof features a central gabled dormer. Fenestration consists of paired, double-hung sash windows with six-over-one lights. A portico with an arched roof and column supports is centered on the main facade. Another Colonial Revival style building is the house located at 605 17th Avenue Northeast (Photo 40). Although less elaborate than the previously discussed residence, this one-story frame house exhibits the central block with wing, gable roof, paired sash windows and portico typical of the Colonial Revival style.

The Dutch influenced variant of the Colonial Revival style is also found within the North Shore District. A representative example is located at 215 11th Avenue North (Photo 41). This building features a center block with wing plans, and a gable roof with a combination hip and shed dormer. The roofing material is slate, and the exterior walls consist of brick and stucco. A portico with an arched roof and Tuscan column supports is centered on the facade. A larger and somewhat more elaborate example, which faces the waterfront, is located at 1416 North Shore Drive Northeast (Photo 42).

Hegrado Apartments, located at 210 22nd Avenue Northeast represents a large and ornate example of the Mediterranean Revival style (Photos 14 and 15). This building features a U-shaped plan and a flat roof with an encircling parapet. A tiered arcade with a shed roof extends from the inside walls that face a landscaped courtyard. The inside corners of the building have hip roof towers with narrow casement windows, and terra cotta crests adorn the base of each tower. Two sets of arched windows with spiral column dividers exist on the third story. Examples of Mediterranean Revival style residences include those located at 555 16th Avenue Northeast, 2321 Brevard Road Northeast, and 2320 Brevard Road Northeast (Photos 43, 44, and 45).

An example of a Masonry Vernacular residential building is located at 224 12th Avenue North (Photo 46). This building is constructed of concrete block finished with stucco and features a low-pitched roof with enclosed overhanging eaves. The only decorative feature consists of a round crest located in the center of the facade.

Although not a dominant style in the neighborhood, several buildings were constructed in the Mission style. San Rafel Apartments, located at 360 13th Avenue Northeast, represents a good example (Photo 47). This apartment building features a central curvilinear parapet and a domed tower. An arcade with round arches, which is currently partially enclosed, originally extended the length of the facade. The tower has two groups of recessed windows accentuated by spiral columns and topped with blind arches. The Old Northeast Bay Apartments located at 205 16th Avenue Northeast represents another less ornate example of a Mission style commercial building (Photo 48).

An example of a single family Mission style residence is located at 725 18th Avenue Northeast (Photo 49). This building has a flat roof with two curvilinear parapets. The exterior fabric is rough stucco and fenestration consists of single and triple double-hung sash windows. Decorative elements include ceramic tile appliques, barrel tile parapet cresting, canales, and barrel tile roofs. Other examples include the residences located at 114 19th Avenue Northeast, 156 19th Avenue Northeast, and 162 19th Avenue Northeast (Photos 50, 51, and 52).

DESCRIPTION

Several Tudor Revival Style buildings exist throughout the neighborhood. A common example is the residence located at 136 21st Avenue Northeast (Photo 53). This building features design elements typical of the style: a steeply-pitched gable roof, recessed arched entrance, decorative half-timbering, and an exterior chimney. Another Tudor Revival style house is located at 116 21st Avenue Northeast (Photo 54). Like the one previously described, this building also features a sharply-pitched gable roof and decorative half-timbering.

Although not as popular as other architectural revival styles, the Renaissance Revival style is represented in the North Shore district. One example is the residence at 1730 Beach Drive Northeast (Photo 55). This building features a low-pitched hip roof with barrel tile and wide eaves supported by decorative brackets. An ornate cornice encircles the main block of the house. The second story contains various groupings of casement windows with the spaces between the windows accented by masonry boxes filled with pebble-dash stucco. The main entrance, which consists of a pair of eight-panel doors, topped by a transom, is located in a flat roof sun porch that extends from the east side of the house. A one-story hip extension with notched rectangular openings projects from the northern elevation. Other decorative features include a round balconette, masonry window boxes, and sconces.

The house at 656 18th Avenue Northeast represents a less elaborate example of this style (Photo 56). It consists of a central block main unit with two projecting wings. The roof is clad with ceramic barrel tile and the eaves exhibit support brackets. The exterior fabric is brick and the central doorway includes fanlight and sidelight surrounds. A flat roof portico with paired columns extends from the main facade to cover the main entrance.

A fine example of a Classical Revival style home is "Seven Oaks" located at 1700 North Shore Drive Northeast (Photo 57). This grand building includes a symmetrical facade dominated by a full-height pedimented gable portico supported by massive Ionic colonnades. A balustraded balcony extends from the second story above the main entrance. Fenestration consists of double-hung sash windows with nine panes per window frame and a fan light above the entrance door. Another impressive example with a wrap-around second story balcony and pedimented portico is located at 166 6th Avenue Northeast (Photo 58). The exterior fabric of this building consists of rusticated block, while modillions accent the entablature, and massive Tuscan colonnades support the portico.

Most of the remaining available lots were developed during the 1930s and early 1940s. During the Great Depression of the 1930s, buildings constructed during this period tended to be smaller in scale and less elaborate than those built during the boom. Styles representative of this period include the vernacular designs, as well as Minimal Traditional, Ranch, Split Level, and Monterey.

Only a few examples of the Art Moderne style are found within the North Shore Historic District. The Hotel Lenox located at 325 6th Avenue North exhibits many elements characteristic of this style (Photo 59).

DESCRIPTION

These include a flat roof, smooth stucco siding, masonry coping, corner pivot windows, and cantilevered overhangs. Another example is the Pan American Apartments located at 145 10th Avenue North (Photo 60). This two-story building features a flat roof and smooth stucco exterior walls. Curved balconies with horizontal pipe railings lend this building a nautical flare.

An example of a typical Ranch style residence is located at 105 17th Avenue Northeast (Photo 61). This low one-story building, which sits parallel to the street, has a low-pitched hip roof, a horizontal facade, and a corner window. A smaller Ranch style house with a low-pitched roof, casement windows, and low horizontal facade is located at 115 17th Avenue Northeast (Photo 62).

Although not prevalent, examples of the Monterey Style are scattered throughout the neighborhood. Two examples are the residences located at 224 26th Avenue North and 606 20th Avenue Northeast (Photos 63 and 64). The building at 224 26th Avenue features a low-pitched gable roof with a one-story cross-gable extension. A second story balcony covered by the principal roof faces the street and fenestration consists of double-hung sash windows with wooden shutters. The first and second stories of this residence, as well as the one at 224 26th Avenue North, exhibit different materials, a common element of the Monterey Style.

A typical Tudor Revival style building is located at 146 21st Avenue Northeast (Photo 65). The residence displays an arched entrance, a steeply pitched facade gable roof and front end chimney. The exterior fabric is frame and fenestration consists of pivot windows. Another example is located at 316 18th Avenue Northeast (Photo 66). This building also features a Tudor Revival influenced entrance, a large front-end chimney stack and a front-facing gable.

Two examples of Minimal Traditional style buildings in the historic district are the residences located at 436 20th Avenue Northeast and 516 21st Avenue Northeast (Photos 67 and 68). Both display the simple planning and vague references to historical styles that typify this type of house which had its origins in the 1930s.

ALTERATIONS

The majority of alterations within the neighborhood consist of exterior alterations, including window replacements, enclosed porches with aluminum jalousie, awning, or other modern windows, and vinyl or other siding. Most of the buildings remain structurally intact and possess good to excellent integrity. Exterior alterations to the garages and garage apartments consist primarily of modern garage doors, modern windows, and vinyl siding.

SUMMARY PARAGRAPH

The North Shore Historic District is significant at the local level under criteria A and C in the areas of Community Planning and Development and Architecture. Representative of the early residential development of the city of St. Petersburg during the first half of the twentieth century, the neighborhood was one of the first suburban residential areas to be developed outside of the central business area of the city. Comprising a distinctive and sizable collection of intact early twentieth century suburban architecture, the North Shore Historic District is also architecturally significant. A wide variety of residential architectural styles from c. 1910 to c. 1945 are represented in the historic district. The district also retains many of its original design features, including brick streets and alleys, hexagonal block sidewalks, and granite curbing as well as its original layout and grid pattern with alleys that parallel the avenues. Based on this concentration of historic buildings and the retention of the historic character, the North Shore Historic District reflects the architectural influences of the decades before, during, and after the Florida Land Boom era of the 1920s.

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

For more than two decades following the conclusion of the Civil War, the southern portion of Florida remained a wilderness and predominantly unsettled.¹ During this period, the state of Florida was faced with a financial crisis involving the title to public lands. The trustees of the state's Internal Improvement Fund had pledged public lands to underwrite the issuing of railroad bonds. This plan to bring the railroads to Florida left the state on the verge of bankruptcy and the public lands heavily mortgaged. This mortgage debt had to be cleared before the state could sell the land. Hamilton Disston, a wealthy Philadelphian, offered to purchase 4,000,000 acres of land in central and south Florida for twenty-five cents an acre, which in turn alleviated the state's debt and allowed for new railroad construction.

With the possibility of new settlement and transportation improvements, many large landowners transferred their interests from agriculture to speculative development. One such man was John Constatine Williams, who owned 1,600 acres of land along the Pinellas Peninsula. William and Peter Demens, the owners of the Orange Belt Railroad, orchestrated an arrangement with Williams that would bring their rail line into the area. In 1888, a town site was surveyed and platted at the rail line terminus; this town was named St. Petersburg after the Demens brothers' birthplace in Russia. Henry Bradley Plant, who incorporated the short line into this rapidly expanding interstate rail system, subsequently purchased the Orange Belt Railroad. The existence of a reliable rail transportation system provided the agricultural community with access to northern markets and brought new settlers and tourists to the area.

SIGNIFICANCE

In the early years of the twentieth century, improvements were undertaken in the expanding community of St. Petersburg. In 1904, a streetcar line was opened, streets were paved, and more developers purchased land for resale to prospective settlers. By the mid-1910s, a second railroad arrived and the first major motor vehicle road to the peninsula was completed. Four notable developers, Noel Mitchell, Charles Hall, C.M. Roser, and C. Perry Snell, converged upon St. Petersburg competing for the business of the hundreds of new residents and tourists arriving daily. These men platted numerous subdivisions and made infrastructure improvements in order to entice potential buyers to purchase building lots within their developments. Streets were laid out, trees were planted, streetlights were installed, and water and sewerage were provided to make the property more attractive.

The residential subdivisions of St. Petersburg grew rapidly during the Florida Land Boom of the 1920s. St. Petersburg's population increased by 36,000 people in five years. Major destination hotels in St. Petersburg, such as the Vinoy (NR 1978) and the Soreno (destroyed 1992), were constructed in the Mediterranean Revival style and sited on the city's waterfront. These hotels accommodated seasonal visitors and prospective land buyers. During this period, $12 million dollars were spent on road paving. The Municipal Pier opened in 1924, and the Gandy Bridge connecting Tampa to St. Petersburg was completed in 1925. However, by the mid-1920s, the development and construction frenzy of the Land Boom began to show a dramatic decline.

Several factors contributed to the failure of Florida's real estate market. In the spring of 1925, many investors began to cancel all Florida real estate transactions as they became panicked by news of bogus Florida real estate ventures. The bust was brought on by excessive speculation that drove up the price of land and articles in the northern newspapers warning buyers of the Florida "land shark." As building activity began to slow, other unfortunate events affected the area. In 1926 and 1928, devastating hurricanes swept through south Florida destroying thousands of buildings and completely halting further development plans in the area. Also, a Mediterranean fruit fly infestation threatened Florida's profitable citrus industry. These incidents proved to be disastrous for Florida, which entered an economic depression several years before the rest of the country.

With the onset of the Great Depression of the 1930s, the local economy and construction industry further declined. The construction of new buildings declined rapidly, mortgage financing became problematical, and builders were out of work. Banks throughout Florida failed during the first years of the decade, including the Central and National Bank and Trust Company, which had been instrumental in financing real estate growth in St. Petersburg. Fortunately, the semi-tropical climate and the area's Gulf of Mexico beaches continued to draw tourists to St. Petersburg during the 1930s. Also, financial relief projects undertaken during the administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt assisted in the economic recovery of the city. Works Progress Administration projects helped boost building activity once again. The programs included housing industry revitalization measures such as insured bank deposits, the refinancing of home mortgages, and the financing of public construction projects.

SIGNIFICANCE

The 1940s were dominated by the military activity of World War II, which brought over 120,000 military personnel into the Tampa Bay area. During and after World War II, infill housing was prevalent in the neighborhoods that had been platted during the Land Boom of the 1920s. The widespread demand for housing intensified and the city witnessed another building boom. After the end of the war, returning veterans were offered low interest, long term mortgages for the construction of new residences, and new technology and building materials allowed for buildings to be constructed quickly and inexpensively. Although many of St. Petersburg's neighborhoods were largely built-out, houses and low-rise apartment buildings were constructed on many of the remaining vacant lots at this time. The increase in growth continued on from the 1950s through the 1970s, much of this expansion occurring in the residential neighborhoods outside of the city's central core. In recent years, residents living within St. Petersburg's older neighborhoods have made concerted efforts to revitalize the city's historic areas. This National Register nomination reflects the desire of citizens to recognize and preserve their architectural and historic resources.

COMMUNITY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT

The property that presently makes up the North Shore Historic District remained largely uninhabited until the first years of the twentieth century, when several families settled on the land near Coffee Pot Bayou. One of the largest private landowners at this time was Erastus A. Barnard, a businessman from Chicago. Barnard's land, which encompassed the northwestern portion of the current neighborhood, was initially used for agricultural purposes and was later subdivided for residential construction as the city of St. Petersburg began to grow rapidly. During this same period, the Tison-Turner Company of Savannah, Georgia, also controlled a large portion of the land that extended along the waterfront to Snell Isle.²

As the development of the North Shore got underway, C. Perry Snell, who would become one of the primary developers of the North Shore area, arrived in St. Petersburg. Snell, a pharmacist and drugstore owner from Louisville, Kentucky, had vacationed in St. Petersburg several times with his heiress wife, Lillian Allen. The Snells decided to make the city their place of permanent residence in 1904, and shortly thereafter Snell established the Bay Shore Land Company with F.A. Wood, A.E. Hoxie, and A.C. Lewis. Snell's new organization quickly platted two large subdivisions south of Coffee Pot Bayou that were the beginnings of St. Petersburg's landmark North Shore Park and the precursors to the North Shore neighborhood.³

A couple of years later, Snell teamed up with J.C. Hamlett to buy several hundred acres to add to his development. Platted in 1910, Snell and Hamlett's North Shore Addition and Snell and Hamlett's Bayview Addition were created from land formerly owned by the St. Petersburg Land and Improvement Company, the Tison-Turner Company, and Erastus Barnard.⁴ By 1911, Snell owned the major portion of the northeastern portion of the city. At this time, advertisements and articles appeared in the St. Petersburg Times and Evening Independent enticing potential buyers to purchase land in the North Shore area with promises of quality homes and progressive infrastructure such as artesian and soft water systems, sewerage systems, and sidewalks.⁵ Additionally, Snell addressed claims from critics that North Shore was too far from the center of the city, by financing a streetcar spur line to Coffee Pot Bayou.⁶ A number of residences were constructed in the North Shore area during the 1910s, but significant growth and expansion was yet to come.

As the Land Boom got underway in the 1920s, Snell platted two additions to the North Shore neighborhood including C. Perry Snell's North Shore Addition in 1920 and Granada Terrace in 1924. Since residential development was rampant throughout St. Petersburg in the 1920s, Snell had to set his subdivisions apart from the others in the city; he did this by creating "residential areas of prestige and beauty."⁷ He landscaped his neighborhoods with palms, magnolias and oak trees. Statuary and other decorative elements, such as tiles, which Snell acquired on buying trips to Europe and Mexico, were placed throughout North Shore.⁸ Granada Terrace, which was intended as an exclusive portion of the North Shore neighborhood, featured vine covered pergolas, curvilinear streets, open green spaces, and unobstructed views of Tampa Bay.⁹

During the Land Boom, hundreds of homes were constructed in the North Shore neighborhood. Throughout Florida at this time, Spanish influenced architectural styles were the most popular and were being applied to residential and commercial buildings in the state. Although numerous homes of various styles—including Bungalow, Colonial Revival, and Frame Vernacular—were being constructed in North Shore, Snell promoted the Mediterranean Revival style in the neighborhood and in the city of St. Petersburg. Snell was considered the "Master of Mediterranean Kitsch," encouraging the construction of the style in Granada Terrace and building structures such his own extravagant home and golf club on Snell Isle, another of his speculative developments.¹⁰

Boom time subdivisions such as Snell's North Shore, as well as large hotels like the Vinoy, greatly affected the growth and development of St. Petersburg in the early 1920s. The physical size of the city expanded in response to increase in population. However, by late-1925, the collapse of the Land Boom was imminent, and even the successful C. Perry Snell was not immune to the effects of the Bust. During 1925, with the decline of the Florida real estate market on the horizon, Snell continued moving forward on his developments, such as the exclusive Snell Isle and the $750,000 Snell Arcade Building (NR 1982) located in the heart of downtown St. Petersburg. Unfortunately, as Florida entered an economic depression, many of the land buyers in his developments were defaulting on their payments, causing Snell to put out a larger amount of his own capital. As the national Depression immersed the country further in financial turmoil, Snell eventually lost properties such as the Snell Building in foreclosure.¹¹

By the end of the Land Boom era, the majority of the lots in the North Shore neighborhood had been built upon. Nonetheless, homes that had cost $40,000 to build several years before were selling for as little as $7,000 during the Depression.¹² In those hard economic times, some of the larger homes were subdivided in order to create rooming houses or apartments, but overall, the fabric of the neighborhood changed very little during these years.¹³ Following World War II and the subsequent increase in population, simple homes, low-rise apartment buildings and small condominium buildings were constructed on many of the remaining lots in the North Shore area.

ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE

The North Shore Historic District largely retains the architectural character of its development from the 1910s through the 1940s. The architectural styles reflect the trends and tastes of the first half of the twentieth century; consequently, the elaborate Victorian and Romantic styles of the late nineteenth century are not present in the district. The district possesses a high concentration of Frame Vernacular and bungalows. It also contains other notable buildings constructed in a number of architectural styles, including Frame Vernacular, Masonry Vernacular, Colonial Revival, Mediterranean Revival, Prairie, Tudor Revival, Minimal Traditional, Ranch, Mission, Classical Revival, Art Moderne, Renaissance Revival, Mission, and Monterey. Historic objects found within the district, such as pergolas, do not exhibit an architectural style. This large historic district also features numerous intact garages and garage apartments designed to compliment the main buildings. The majority of the buildings in the district maintain good to excellent integrity. Some buildings were constructed prior to 1920 and others date from the 1930s and 1940s, but the bulk of the buildings were constructed in the Land Boom years of the 1920s. Because of the overall architectural and contextual cohesiveness of the district and the retention of historic features such as the hexagonal sidewalk pavers, granite curbstones, and landscaping, the North Shore Historic District is distinguishable from other neighborhoods within the city of St. Petersburg.

ARCHITECTURAL STYLES

Frame Vernacular

The predominant house style within the North Shore Historic District is Frame Vernacular. These buildings were generally designed and constructed by local builders from readily available materials. The houses are usually rectangular in plan for economical construction. Most of the buildings have horizontal weatherboard siding. The overhanging roof eaves provide shade for the sides of the house and dormers supply additional air circulation. Common features are the hipped or gabled rooflines, roof overhangs with exposed rafter tails, and slat porch balusters. By the 1920s, the Craftsman bungalow began to significantly influence vernacular house designs. As a result, post-1920 Frame Vernacular houses often feature some Craftsman elements such as knee braces, exposed rafter tails, and crossover gabled roofs.

Masonry Vernacular

A number of single family residences and apartment buildings within the district are considered Masonry Vernacular. Similar to the Frame Vernacular houses in the district, Masonry Vernacular houses were inexpensive to construct and simple in design. In most cases, the houses constructed in this style date from the 1920s through the 1940s. They are constructed of brick, hollow tile, or concrete block, often covered with stucco and then painted. The houses are generally rectangular in plan, one to two stories in height, and exhibit little or no ornamentation. Like the Frame Vernacular residences in the district, the Masonry Vernacular houses in the neighborhood often have bungalow or even Prairie style elements. Masonry Vernacular buildings from the 1930s and 1940s show influences of the International and Modernistic styles such as bands scored in the stucco.

Craftsman/Bungalow

Bungalows are among the other prevalent house types in the district. Inspired by construction techniques and aesthetics of the English Arts and Crafts movement, Craftsman architecture was popularized in America primarily by the work of Greene and Greene, brothers and architects from California. During the first three decades of the twentieth century, the Craftsman bungalow became the favored house type throughout the country. Bungalows are typically one or two stories high and feature low-pitched, gabled roofs with wide eaves and exposed roof rafters. Decorative beams or knee braces are commonly added under the gables and tapered square columns support the porches. Exterior materials can vary among weatherboard, shingles, and stucco. Windows often have a three-over-one light configuration, but can also exhibit various multi-light windowpane configurations.

Colonial Revival

The Colonial Revival style embodies the massing and details of the early English and Dutch houses built in America during the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. Although based primarily on the eighteenth century classical Georgian and Adam styles, the Colonial Revival houses found in the district are an eclectic mixture of several periods without reference to a particular period or formal style. These houses were popular in the United States from the 1910s through the 1930s, with a resurgence during the post-World War II years. Typical features include side-gabled roofs, symmetrical plans, front doors with pediments, transoms, fanlights, and sidelights, and small entrance porches with classically inspired columns. The most recognizable feature of Dutch Colonial Revival residences is the gambrel roof.

Prairie

The Prairie style was developed in Chicago and derived its name from the prairies of the Midwest and its low silhouette. This architectural style is exemplified through a horizontal emphasis and wide projecting eaves. It was developed primarily by architect Frank Lloyd Wright and his followers, who advocated a style that was integrated with the landscape and in harmony with its setting. Massive square piers that serve as porch supports, bands of windows, flat or low-pitched hipped roofs, and wide eaves characterize this style. Simplicity is a characteristic of these buildings, which is often reflected by an emphasis on massing versus decorative details. In this neighborhood, some examples of the style have paired brackets underneath the roof eaves that are not commonly associated with the Prairie style.

Mediterranean Revival

The Mediterranean Revival style is the architectural style most intimately linked with the 1920s Florida Land Boom. The style in Florida has its origin in the desire of early twentieth century architects to create a building style appropriate to the history of the Sun Belt areas of the United States. The style was intended to embody the history and romance of the state's Spanish heritage, and draw new residents and winter tourists to the picturesque resort area. Sometimes referred to under various subheadings, including Spanish Colonial Revival, the style was influenced by building traditions in Spain and other countries along the Mediterranean Sea, including Italy and France. The style was often applied to domestic buildings in upper or middle class developments of the 1920s. The Mediterranean Revival homes and apartment buildings in the North Shore neighborhood are characterized by an eclectic mix of details such as cast stone columns and plaques, as well as stuccoed wall surfaces, and low-pitched red clay barrel tile roofs. Doors and windows are often arched and balconies are common.

SIGNIFICANCE

Renaissance Revival

The Italian Renaissance style was popular in the United States between 1890 and 1935. The earlier Italianate style, which persisted between 1840 and 1885, was loosely based on Italian models, resulting in considerable artistic license in the reproduction of prototypes. In the 1880s, the firm of McKim, Mead, and White gave impetus to the Italian Renaissance style, which was part of the Second Renaissance Revival movement, with the Villard Houses in New York. In the 1890s, fashionable architects employed the style, which provided contrast with Gothic inspired Shingle and Queen Anne styles. After World War I, the perfection of simulated masonry exterior veneer fabrics made possible the accurate representations even in modest examples of the style. Although Florida has a number of good examples of the style, it was not as popular as the contemporary Colonial Revival or Mediterranean Revival styles. Italian Renaissance was one of many architectural types with Mediterranean precedents that became popular in Florida during the land boom of the 1920s. Most of the state's Italian Renaissance style buildings were erected between 1920 and 1930, although the style had made significant advances nationally by 1910.

Minimal Traditional

The Minimal Traditional style house was popular from the 1930s through the 1950s. During the Great Depression of the 1930s, Minimal Traditional houses appeared throughout the country as a logical and economical response to the economic hardships of the era. Minimal Traditional buildings reflect a combination of influences from earlier traditional styles such as Tudor or Colonial Revival. Common attributes of the style are low or moderate roof pitches, very little roof overhang, and front-facing gables. Typically, these one-story houses also have prominent exterior chimneys, wood double-hung sash windows, vents or decorative wood in the gable ends, and Colonial Revival influences such as door surrounds and shutters.

Ranch

The Ranch style originated in California during the mid-1930s and continued to be constructed through the mid-1970s. The popularity of this style is attributed to the increased dependence on automobiles after World War II and the cheaper land prices of the post-war era. Faint influences of Spanish Colonial, Prairie, and Craftsman architecture can be seen in Ranch style buildings. The one-story buildings generally have an asymmetrical front elevation and a horizontal emphasis. They have low-pitched roofs that are typically hipped, but sometimes gabled. Ranch houses usually have few extraneous decorative features.

Tudor Revival

Tudor Revival buildings were loosely based on early sixteenth century Tudor and various medieval English houses ranging from thatch roofed cottages to grand manors. Built primarily in the 1920s, these houses feature a combination of elements from various English precedents such as steeply-pitched roofs, front-facing gables, overlapping gables, half-timbering, multiple exterior materials, casement windows, and prominent chimneys.

Mission

The Mission style originated in California during the 1880s and 1890s in response to its Spanish heritage and the romantic Franciscan mission churches found along the state's coastline. In keeping with Florida's Spanish roots, the Mission style also became popular in the state during the Land Boom years. Generally, Mission houses are simple in design and were inexpensive to build. The district features one- and two-story residences and apartment buildings constructed in the Mission style, which often display flat roofs obscured by a shaped parapet and/or red barrel tile roof overhangs, stucco wall surfaces, and arched openings. Since the defining characteristic of the Mission style is simplicity, some examples are hard to distinguish from masonry vernacular residences.

Classical Revival

Held in Chicago, the World's Colombian Exposition of 1893 revived an interest in the classical architectural designs of the ancient Greeks and Romans. Throughout the country, buildings inspired by classical precedents were being constructed at this time. The Classical Revival style was often applied to civic or commercial buildings, but it was also found on residences as well. Its occurrence in residential construction dates from c. 1895 to c. 1950. One of the main characteristics of the style includes a full-height entry portico or porch with massive columns. The porch roof, which is supported by classical columns, can be gabled, hipped, or flat. Windows are usually double-hung sash types, and doorways often feature Greek Revival, Georgian, or Adamesque accents.

Monterey

The Monterey style is a modern interpretation of the Anglo-influenced Spanish Colonial houses of northern California. Built from the 1920s through the 1950s, the houses combined Spanish adobe construction with pitched-roof, massed-plan English forms brought to California from the eastern United States. Examples from the early 1920s usually favor Spanish detailing, while those from the 1940s to the 1950s generally reflect American Colonial Revival elements. A common characteristic of the type is a full-width balcony on the second story of the main facade.

Art Moderne

The few examples of Art Moderne architecture in the historic district should be more aptly be called Modernistic, since they lack the elaborate decorative detailing of the Art Deco. Modernistic buildings, including residences, enjoyed a limited popularity in the United States during the 1920s and 1930s. The buildings usually feature smooth stucco wall surfaces, flat roofs with a low parapet or coping at the roof line. Horizontal grooves or lines in walls gave the buildings a horizontal emphasis, and balconies were often bordered with pipe metal balustrades.
