ITEM NUMBER 8 PAGE 10

Upper East Main Street District
Wa-B-23-36

Description

Extending roughly a block along East Main Street and a half block along Elm Street, this residential district is located between the historic and commercial core of Bowling Green and Reservoir Hill, the site of the Confederate forts that ringed the city and the present location of the city's hospital. It is a highly concentrated collection of late nineteenth and early twentieth century structures--fewer than a third of the houses were built after about 1910, and none was built after about 1940. The houses are constructed of wood, brick or stone, and stylistically they are eclectic, both as a group and individually (see individual inventory forms). Of particular note are the Presbyterian Manse (Wa-B-25), the Eugene Underwood House (Wa-B-26), the Carl Herman House (Wa-B-27), the Mary Underwood House (Wa-B-28), and the Omer Hays House (Wa-B-32). The district is heavily planted in trees and shrubbery, and streetscape photographs are impossible to provide.

Significance

The architectural significance of this district lies in its high concentration of late nineteenth and early twentieth century residences, most of which individually possess outstanding architectural significance. This district has survived largely intact within a block of the historic and commercial center of Bowling Green and thus illustrates the close proximity of residential and commercial areas that was typical of nineteenth century Kentucky towns. In addition, the district holds local historical significance in that many of the houses were built for locally-recognized leaders in commerce, industry, religion, the judiciary and the hotel trade (see individual inventory forms).

The justification for the boundaries of the Upper East Main Street District is that it constitutes a highly concentrated group of late nineteenth and early twentieth century residences. Commercial structures are located to the west, across Chestnut Street, the mid-twentieth century hospital buildings occupy the peak of the hill immediately to the east, across Park Street, and to the north and south are residences of less significance and later construction dates.
