Narrative Description

Summary

Dunlap Colored Cemetery is located in rural Morris County, Kansas, approximately one half mile north and east of the town of Dunlap and nine miles southeast of Council Grove, the county seat (Figure 1). Formally established in 1894, the earliest burials in the cemetery date to 1880; the last interment was in 1993. The rectangular 2.9-acre site is located at the southeast corner of the NE/4 of Section 12, Township 17 South, Range 9 East and is accessed from 100 Road by a set of gates (Figures 2, 4 & 5). The south, west, and north boundaries are demarcated by barbed wire fencing, secured with Fulghem (Chapman) posts, chain link fencing, and by gates on the east end of the property.

Elaboration

Dunlap Cemetery resides in rural Morris County and is accessed from a gravel road that marks the north-south county line between Morris (west) and Lyon (east) counties. In Morris County, this road is known as 100 Road; Lyon County calls it Road A.

This area of Kansas is on the western edge of the Osage Cuestas division of the Osage Plains section of the Central Lowland province of the Interior Plains division of North America.¹ The bedrock of the region consists of inter-bedded limestone, shale, and sandstone formations of Pennsylvanian age. Exposure and differential erosion of the unequally resistant, westward sloping strata at the ground surface has created a series of low parallel ridges. These "cuestas" have steep, rugged, east facing escarpments that front on broad, gently inclined, westward sloping vales. Thus, the topography consists of long, low rolling hills and wide, shallow valleys. In general, the escarpments exhibit an irregular northeast-southwest trend. The major stream courses, however, flow to the east and southeast, transverse to the direction of the escarpments and against the westward dip of the rock formations.²

The cemetery itself is an east-west rectangular tract of land (495 feet by 264 feet) at the southeast corner of the northeast quarter of Section 12. The majority of the cemetery land is at an elevation of approximately 1,280 feet above sea level (Figure 3). Natural prairie grasses and flowers thrive as this once-pasture land is untouched by cattle who would otherwise be attracted to the sweet plants (compassplant and butterfly milkweed).³ Within the cemetery are two large shade trees and several small wild shrubs. Areas of unkempt plants/shrubs at the west and north portions of the cemetery contain parts of headstones or full headstones within their midst.

The cemetery boundary is marked with barbed wire set in place with Fulghem (Chapman) posts (Figure 3) around all sides with a gated entrance at the east end of the property, at the county line road. Due to the rocky nature of the upland areas of Dunlap, digging through the layers of soil to erect fence posts was nearly an impossible task in the 1880s and 1890s. An African American farmhand by the name of Fulghem, who worked on several ranches in the area, developed a method of driving metal rods into large limestone rocks, which were placed at appropriate distances along a line to hold barbed wire fencing in place. However, the landowner of one of the pastures where this technique was applied, filed and received the patent on Mr. Fulghem's technique.⁴ These posts are in place on three sides of the cemetery plot. The west, north, and south ends abut pasture land, now as in 1894.

The cemetery entrance is located at the south end of the east boundary, accessed from 100 Road. Two wide gates stand at the entrance to the cemetery; the section of fence and gates are in poor repair presently and cannot be closed. A graveled path runs west from the entrance along the full length of the south boundary. The path curves to the north about 80 feet before curving to the northeast for approximately 220 feet. The path then turns south and reconnects with the east-west path along the south boundary. This north-south path occurs in the approximate center of the cemetery. Graves are concentrated in the south half of the cemetery, as the northern half is more rocky.

There are approximately 17 rows of headstones; however, there are uneven rows or random stones placed throughout the plat. Estimates suggest 125-130 graves are located here; although, there could be more as no current record exists as to the exact burial points of the dead.⁵ In the beginning, many of the graves were unmarked or marked only by a stone without chisel or engraving of names or dates. Wooden crosses long ago

In some sections, family seem to be grouped together, but linking family names and relationships is more difficult without formal records. Known to be buried at this cemetery are many of the first settlers of the Singleton Dunlap Colony (Table 1), including Columbus M. Johnson, his wife, and many of their descendants. The first burial at this site is believed to have taken place in 1880; London Harness, the last direct descendant of the founding settlers, was interred in 1993. In 2011 Jackie Davis' remains were scattered over the grave of his deceased father, Ralph Davis.

Through the years, chain link fencing has replaced some of the barbed wire at the east end though still utilizing the limestone rock originally placed in the 1880s. A wooden sign indicating "Dunlap Cemetery" cannot be seen from the road or even up close as it is covered in overgrown vines and weeds. Many of the stones have sunken into the ground or have been broken or eroded through the years and are in need of attention. At one time had an outhouse stood at the southwest corner of the property (Figure 2), but it has since been removed.

The cemetery is now maintained by volunteers of the township, and those volunteers are long past the age of having the physical stamina to maintain the grounds in a safe and proper manner. The graves are in need of attention as it is evident the ground is sinking in around some of the grave sites and markers are settling down into the earth to the point of falling over and/or breaking apart. Aerial satellite photos indicate there are more burial mounds than the cemetery board has records of, as paper records for the plots were lost years ago in buildings long since burned down or torn down.

Dunlap Colored Cemetery retains good historic integrity. The setting is especially excellent as the surrounding rural landscape has not changed significantly since the cemetery was founded. Similarly, the cemetery remains in its original location with no re-interments. Although not all of the graves are marked, the remaining stones help to indicate the associations and feeling of this place as a cemetery.

Applicable National Register Criteria

(Mark "x" in one or more boxes for the criteria qualifying the property for National Register listing.)

- A Property is associated with events that have made a significant contribution to the broad patterns of our history.
- B Property is associated with the lives of persons significant in our past.
- C Property embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction or represents the work of a master, or possesses high artistic values, or represents a significant and distinguishable entity whose components lack individual distinction.
- D Property has yielded, or is likely to yield, information important in prehistory or history.

(Mark "x" in all the boxes that apply.)

Property is:

- A Owned by a religious institution or used for religious purposes.
- B removed from its original location.

Period of Significance (justification)

The period of significance begins in 1880 with the earliest known burial and ends in 1931 with the last Emancipation Day celebration held in Dunlap. Although burials continued into the 1990s, the end of Emancipation Day celebrations unofficially marked the end of the active African American community of the Dunlap Colony with which this cemetery is associated.

Criteria Considerations (justification)

This cemetery meets the requirements of Criteria Consideration D because it derives its primary significance from associations with the Exoduster settlements of the Singleton Farm Colony of Dunlap. Aside from this cemetery, few resources (such as churches, houses, or farmsteads) associated with this group of African-American remains. Further, Columbus Johnson, one of the founders of the Dunlap Colony, is buried here, and no known extant resource remains that is associated with this man.

Narrative Statement of Significance

Summary

Dunlap Colored Cemetery is associated with the Exoduster settlement known as the Dunlap Colony. One of three Benjamin "Pap" Singleton Exoduster colonies in the state of Kansas, the Dunlap Colony was started in 1878 and included 200 settlers. Eventually the Dunlap Colony came to refer to the Exodusters who settled in the original colony location, the town of Dunlap, and additional area settlements spanning Morris and Lyon counties. Although there are a few African Americans buried in the town's designated cemetery, the Dunlap Colored Cemetery was established in 1880 by the Exoduster settlers as a reaction to local white settlers who objected to African Americans being buried in the same place as whites. This cemetery is nominated to the National Register of Historic Places for its statewide significance under Criterion A for its association with African American settlement in southeastern Morris County and northwestern Lyon County, Kansas, which began as Singleton's Dunlap Colony. This cemetery meets the requirements of Criteria Consideration D (A Cemetery) because it derives its primary significance from associations with the Exoduster settlements of the Singleton Farm Colony of Dunlap. Columbus Johnson, who was Singleton's business associate, is buried here. Aside from this cemetery, few resources (such as churches, houses, or farmsteads) associated with this group of African Americans remain.

Elaboration

Morris County and the Town of Dunlap

Between 1846 and 1873, one-third of what is now Morris County was part of the Kaw's (Kanza, Kansa) Diminished Reservation.⁷ After the Kaw ceded the remainder of their Diminished Reservation lands to the US Government in May 1873, the tribe removed to Indian Territory (modern-day Oklahoma). The US Government then began to sell the land to settlers.⁸ Speculators, investors, and businessmen who would make a reasonable offer for any section of its holdings came forward to take advantage of the opportunity.

Joseph Dunlap purchased some of this land. According to state historian William Cutler, Dunlap came to Kansas in 1858, "settling at the old Indian Mission, on Big John Creek, in Morris County" where he served as a registered trader with the Kaw for six years.⁹ In 1864 he settled in the southeast quarter of Section 14, Township 17 South, Range 9 East, about five miles southeast of the "old Indian Mission," becoming the first white settler in what would eventually become Morris County's Valley Township.¹⁰

When the Kaw removed to Indian Territory and the lands were open for sale, Dunlap appears to have purchased land in the adjacent Section 13 with the express purpose of establishing a town.¹¹ The Missouri, Kansas, & Texas (Katy) Railroad had been established through the area in 1869, and Dunlap saw an opportunity to establish a town on the line.¹² Dunlap began selling land lots to interested persons, and soon the beginnings of the new town of Dunlap nine miles south and east of Council Grove was established; the Katy constructed a depot at Dunlap in 1874.¹³ By 1883, when Cutler published his History of the State of Kansas, he described the town, "It has a population of between 100 and 150, and carries on quite a business. The place has two or three stores and a grist and saw mill. ... Colored people form a large per cent of the population."¹⁴ The town saw the height of its population in the late 1800s and early 1900s, with 408 people in 1890 and 400 in 1900.¹⁵ With over 300 people, including 85 African Americans, in 1915, Dunlap boasted "Four churches, two schools, three general stores, one bank, one contractor and builder, two hardware stores, two physicians, one garage, one restaurant, one barber shop, one lumber yard, two blacksmith shops, one hotel, one livery barn, one horse and mule sales barn, one harness shop, two rural routes, two cream station, one telephone system" (Figure 6).¹⁶ The town was heavily dependent on the agricultural endeavors of the surrounding countryside, and the presence of the Katy Railroad allowed the area's grain and stock to be easily shipped. Today little is left of Dunlap with the exception of a few houses and a vacant school gymnasium. The population in 2010 was 30 people, none of whom were black.

Benjamin “Pap” Singleton and the Exoduster Movement

During his governorship, Kansas Governor John St. John (1879-1883) worked with a larger pool of interested developers to sell the remaining Kaw lands in Morris County. Among the men with whom he worked was Benjamin “Pap” Singleton. Born into slavery in 1809, Singleton established the Tennessee Real Estate and Homestead Association in 1869, whose initial purpose was “to help poor Tennessee blacks purchase farms.”¹⁷ When the search for reasonably priced land in Tennessee turned up empty, Singleton and his associates, namely Columbus Johnson and Alonzo DeFrantz, turned their attention to “sunny Kansas” to provide ample land for these new settlers (Figure 7). In 1873 Singleton and Johnson came to inspect Kansas as a suitable place to settle.

The emigration of tens of thousands of former slaves out of the South, and primarily into Kansas, was known even at the time of its occurrence as the “Great Negro Exodus” or the “Exoduster Movement,” with Singleton often referring to himself as Moses in contemporary newspapers. In 1879 alone, an estimated 20,000 people relocated to Kansas from the South.¹⁸ Although the Exodus started prior to the end of Reconstruction in 1877, the Exodusters increasingly left the South because of “terrorism, poverty, and the loss of their civil and political rights following the end of Reconstruction....”¹⁹ In his April 1879 letter to Governor St. John, John J. Waller explains:

Do you ask what has caused such a step? Then listen while I answer as only a black man, and former slave, can answer. In the first place we are robbed of our freedom in the South, our manhood is not even respected, our people are murdered without mercy, our school houses are burned, our families are outraged. We are in debt at the end of every year because white men take advantage of our ignorance and prey upon our generosity. ... The colored race, loving justice as we do has settled upon this peaceable plan to liberate ourselves.²⁰

Writing in May 1879, Harper’s Weekly speculates why Kansas was the primary destination of these immigrants:

The reason probably is that this State has been more thoroughly advertised than any other, on account of the early struggles which established freedom in it when a Territory, and as having been the scene of the exploits of John Brown and other martyrs of freedom.²¹

Exodusters settled in cities and counties across the state, but between 1875 and 1878, Benjamin Singleton and his partners established three colonies in Kansas specifically for black refugees. By 1875 the Association had purchased land in Cherokee County, near current Baxter Springs, and brought 300 settlers to establish the first Singleton Farming Colony. The Association established its most well-known—and arguably most successful—colony in Graham County, near Nicodemus in 1877.²² The Dunlap Colony began in 1878.

In May 1879 Governor St. John established the Kansas Freedman's Relief Association (KFRA), whose aim, like Singleton's Tennessee Real Estate and Homestead Association, was to assist the Exodusters with settling in the state. Topeka, as state capital, became a center of settlement with a large concentration of refugees settling blocks from the Capitol in what became known as Tennessee Town for its direct association with immigrants from that state.²³

The Dunlap Colony

Unlike the settlements in Cherokee and Graham counties, the Dunlap Colony initially consisted of a concentration of four small settlements established near the new village of Dunlap, Kansas. The arrangement of small settlements—as opposed to one large settlement—was due to the fact that one large tract was not available, as tracts suitable for the colony were squatted on by white settlers.²⁴ Undeterred Singleton's Association established smaller settlements within close proximity to each other. Historian Joseph Hickey describes the locations of these four settlements (Figure 8):

One, established seven miles or so north of Dunlap above Rock Creek in Morris County, became known as the "Rock Creek Colony." Two others, both roughly three miles east and northeast of Dunlap, were in Lyon County—one in Americus Township, the other in Agnes City Township. A final settlement was established in the village of Dunlap where possibly as many as twenty families took claims on the north side of the Katy railroad tracks that extended from the valley floor northeast into the rocky uplands.²⁵

In May 1878, the Council Grove Republican reported, "The colored colony that has recently located in Morris county, near Dunlap, numbers 18 families, 122 persons."²⁶ The Singleton Colony of Morris and Lyon Counties, State of Kansas was officially incorporated with the state on June 24, 1879. According to the incorporation document, the purpose of this corporation was "to promote immigration and the encouragement of agriculture and the acquisition of homes for colored people.”²⁷ Colonists purchased 40- and 80-acre plots from the Corporation with a small down payment and annual payments six years hence until the balance was paid in full.²⁸ The Corporation was headquartered in Dunlap and included the following directors, all of whom lived Dunlap at the time of incorporation: Benjamin Singleton, W.A. Sizemore, Alonzo DeFrantz, Fred Williamson, George Wade, George Moon, John Elliott, Austin Dozier, John Davis, William Shrou, and John Wade. Pap Singleton left Dunlap shortly thereafter and went on to try to establish other settlements around the country and abroad. Columbus Johnson, one of the original partners in the Tennessee Real Estate and Homestead Association, moved his family from Tennessee up to Topeka in 1879, and they soon relocated to Dunlap. Johnson and wife, Josephine, raised their own family in Dunlap and became active leaders in the community.

Governor St. John’s KFRA resettled several refugees, who had come to Topeka, in the Dunlap Colony from 1879 to 1881; although, the exact number of migrants is unknown. Sweat equity made those first farms produce but not as profitably as the farmers had hoped for, and many left the farms and the countryside. The Morris County Times of February 1880 suggests many of those “first settlers found things so bleak they were planning to ‘return to their former homes in the future.’”²⁹ According to Hickey, farm failure between 1880 and 1885 is indicated in the decline of black farmers in the census data from those years. Few settlers appear to have actually settled in the agricultural areas of the Dunlap Colony.³⁰ Census data also indicates the largest percentage of black residents were in the town of Dunlap itself.

In 1880 the Presbyterian Church Synod sent missionaries into Dunlap to establish an educational and religious center for the new pioneers and to assist them in acclimating to this new environment. The Freedmen’s Academy of Kansas, which was known in Dunlap as the Colored Academy, opened in 1880 to assist the children of the settlers. After the KFRA closed its headquarters in 1881, a local offshoot was located in Dunlap to continue encouraging settlement and give assistance to the settlers.³¹ The Dunlap Freedmen’s Aid Association, as the local offshoot of KFRA was known, helped secure funds for the purchase of additional farmland in Valley Township for black settlers.

In 1881 Ann F. Jamison, a supporter in Maine, bequeathed a sufficient amount of money for the purchase of 240 acres in Section 27, a few miles southwest of Dunlap. Rather than purchase 40- and 80-acre plots as with Singleton’s colony, A.B. Whiting’s Subdivision, as it was called, consisted of 28 lots of from five to ten acres each.³² The land was secured and opened to black settlers in 1885, and eventually 15 families located here. London Harness, Dunlap’s last Exoduster descendent, recalled in 1977 that the “colony” in Section 27 had their own church, and the settlers farmed their plots and worked for white farmers in the area.³³ The 1901 Morris County atlas confirms the location of this settlement and the presence of a church; nothing remains of this settlement today except the trace of the old road shown on the atlas (Figure 9).

In 1886 Topeka’s Mark and Hannah Hillyer partitioned their land in the southeast quarter of Section 12 into 32 five-acre lots and offered these lots to black settlers. Six families located in this quarter section, which became known as the Hillyer Subdivision, in the 1890s (Figure 9).³⁴

The charitable foundations and Freedmen's Academy left and closed during the economic and social downturn of the 1890s.³⁵ The loss of these support institutions significantly affected the black population in Valley Township and the Dunlap Colony. Hickey notes that between 1895 and 1905, "the number of black families in the village declined from twenty-nine to nineteen, and only six of twenty-one farmers remained in Whiting's and Hillyer's Subdivisions. The rural black population of Valley Township, in Morris County, declined by more than 50 percent."³⁶ In Lyon County, the settlements in Americus and Agnes City also saw dwindling numbers. Old folks and young children continued to populate the town in the lean years when family providers had to obtain work outside of Dunlap, and during the first world war. The last African American resident of Dunlap, London Harness, passed away in 1993. Apart from the cemetery, little remains in Dunlap or the surrounding countryside to remember the Exoduster population, and their descendants, who settled in this area.

Dunlap Colored Cemetery

With a village as small as Dunlap, one cemetery would naturally accommodate the citizens. However, two cemeteries are associated with Dunlap and its surrounding area. The smaller of the two, the Dunlap Colored Cemetery, was established in 1880 by the black settlers more out of necessity than out of a desire to be segregated.

As the number of black refugees into the Dunlap area increased, resentment arose from the some of the white settlers towards them. Discrimination was open, and clear boundaries were drawn between the white and black populations. Separate churches, school, and residential areas became the norm. Hickey explains that some white "merchants barred blacks from entering their stores."³⁷ Newspaper accounts of citizen activities were also reported separately in the Dunlap Courier and Dunlap Reflector under headings such as "Colored Society News" or just "Colored Folks."³⁸

Cemeteries were also expected to be segregated. Initially, graves were placed on private property or in small church yards, but it became apparent quite quickly that a larger, more permanent place would need to be secured. In February 1880, Dunlap citizens met to discuss establishing a cemetery, and "a question arose in regard to colored people using the grounds...."³⁹ As a result, the following notice was posted at the local barber shop:

There will be a meeting of the colored people of Dunlap Township, to take into consideration a grave yard, as there is public objection to colored people being buried where our good Republicans are buried, at 7 o'clock p.m., at the M.E. Church, February 28th, 1880.⁴⁰

A short time later, a group of African American citizens met with landowners Henry and Nancy Curtis about acquiring three acres of their property in Section 12 to establish their own cemetery a quarter mile north of the town cemetery (Figure 9). Although the first man was buried in the cemetery in 1880, the cemetery land was not deeded to the Dunlap Colored Cemetery Association trustees until 1893. These trustees included Columbus Johnson, Ralph Mattox, A. J. Howard, and Anderson Lytle.⁴¹

The Dunlap Colored Cemetery Association Trustees and Henry and Nancy Curtis registered the sale of the land at the price of $61.62 with the Register of Deeds, J.H. Straight, on 21 October 1893, and it was notarized by E.D. Bulen.

Dunlap's Colored Cemetery became part of the cultural life of the area's black population. Not only did families honor their dead soldiers and families on Decoration Day and later Veteran's Day, the black community held a homecoming type celebration each year on or around September 22 known to them as Emancipation Day. This celebration brought back former "colored" residents of the Dunlap community to pay respects to their surviving elders, honor their family legacies, and share stories together of not only the "before" times but of the events going on in their current lives. A community dinner was held at one of the churches still opened or in the G.A.R. hall, and afterwards, those who were able would take the two-mile march in parade style out to the cemetery where their ancestors had been laid to rest. They would gather together once again and give proper respects to those who had broken the barriers for them and encouraged them to continue to seek out new opportunities for success and happiness. The last Emancipation Day celebration in Dunlap was held in September 1931.

Although a complete list of persons buried in the cemetery is unknown, records reveal that those who are known to have been interred here are associated with Dunlap and the Dunlap Colony. Original black pioneers include Ralph Mattox, John Summers, A.J. Howard, and Martin V.B. Payne. Columbus and Josephine Johnson and some of their children are also buried here.⁴² Available census records indicate several of those buried here were born into slavery, lived in Valley Township or Dunlap in Morris County and Agnes City and Americus townships in Lyon County (Table 1). Many of those buried here are not found in available census records.

This cemetery is directly associated with the Exoduster movement into Kansas and specifically with the Father of the Exodus, Benjamin "Pap" Singleton. This cemetery is significant to Morris County as a tangible link to its settlement history, but it is also significant to the state of Kansas for its association with Singleton, being the best representative of Singleton's Dunlap Colony, one of three such settlements in the state.

Property Owner: (complete this item at the request of the SHPO or FPO)

Real ownership of Dunlap Colored Cemetery is currently undetermined. The following information attempts to clarify the ownership situation. Information compiled from: Jan Kimbrell (nomination sponsor), Sharon Haun (Morris County Historical Society), Kathy Sachs (Deputy Assistant Secretary of State), Tom Nanney (Attorney General office's contact), Bill Kassebaum (Morris County counselor), and the Morris County Appraiser's Office.

1. The county appraiser's records list the cemetery's owner of record as the Dunlap Colored Cemetery Assn.
2. The Assn., chartered in 1894, lost its charter in 1972. The charter has never been reinstated.
3. The Assn. is considered dead by the Secretary of State's office.
4. As no "heir" has been established for the Assn., the cemetery has no official owner.
5. The county, as a government entity, does not claim ownership nor do they claim to be the ones maintaining said cemetery (KSA 19-3106), as the cemetery is not considered abandoned.
6. Only the Attorney General can abandon a cemetery; "abandon" is a legal term, but this cemetery does not meet the qualifications for abandonment (see 12 below).
7. In 1936 a Dunlap Cemetery District (District) was established (KSA 17-1330) and is still the entity overseeing maintenance of the property.
8. Morris County allots a mill levy to the District for annual upkeep (KSA 17-1330).
9. Ralph Hedgespeth (2449 Dunlap Rd, Council Grove, KS 66846) is the District contact on file with the county.
10. Mr. Hedgespeth does not claim to be associated with the District any longer.
11. No one knows who exactly is part of the District board.
12. Neither the Attorney General's office nor the Secretary of State's office has jurisdiction over determining who is the owner because the cemetery was established prior to Kansas' 1900 Cemetery Act.

Notification of intent to nominate the cemetery was sent to Morris County Commissioners, Sharon Haun (Morris County Historical Society), and Ralph Hedgespeth (District contact on file). Notices were also published in local newspapers (Council Grove Republican & Emporia Gazette). No person(s) claiming ownership contacted SHPO.

RE: Nomination for National Recognition

The Morris County Commissioners support Jan Kimbrell's registration to file a nomination for National recognition for the Dunlap Colored Cemetery located north of the town of Dunlap in Morris County, Ks.

The Dunlap Colored Cemetery is the second largest organized burial site of black settlers in Kansas. The last two known black descendants of the original settlers passed in 1993 and 2010 leaving no direct connections living in the Dunlap community.

We support the preservation of this historic site and Ms. Kimbrell's application for nomination of the Dunlap Colored Cemetery to the National Register of Historic places.
