Washington's Headquarters, or the Potts House, is a two-story, four-room structure with gabled roof and about 22-feet wide and 27-feet deep. Constructed of cut graystone, the main house has two chimneys set in the south end wall and a small (22-by 13-foot) one-and-a-half-story stone wing built on the main axis on the north side. Pent eaves extend across the gable ends of the main house at the third floor level.

First floor windows in the three-bay-wide west (front) facade have 12 over 12 panes, are adorned by exterior panelled shutters, and have flat gauged stone arches over them. The foreshortened second story windows have six panes over nine. Stone steps lead up to a small stone stoop before the entranceway, which is set in the left bay. The entranceway is sheltered by a small domed hood over the door, which is comprised of a divided Dutch door.

Inside, the side hall extends entirely through the main house to a door in the rear and this passage also contains the stairway leading to the second floor.

A door on the left of the hall leads to the kitchen in the north service wing and two doors on the right lead into the two rooms on the first floor--the living or reception room in front and the dining room or Washington's Office in the back.

The same plan is repeated on the second floor of the main house, where there are two bedrooms on the south side and a guest bedroom at the west end of the hall. The rooms have fine Georgian paneling of advanced design, wide fireplaces, and wrought iron hardware.

About 90% of the house is original. Carefully restored and furnished with Washington mementos, Washington's Headquarters is open to visitors as a historic house exhibit.
