THE MEDICAL INSTITUTE OF THE CITY OF LOUISVILLE, 1839

This building, designed by Gideon Shyroek, was destroyed by fire in 1856. It was rebuilt on the same site and used until 1907. It is now part of the Central High School.

OLD MEDICAL BUILDING - UNIVERSITY OF LOUISVILLE

Date: 1837-1838, rebuilt 1856.

Style: Greek Neo-classicism.

Architects: Built in 1837-38 by Gideon Shryock, destroyed by fire and rebuilt with some changes by Henry Whitestone in 1856.

Original use: Medical building.

Other uses: The building was used for many years by the Board of Education of Louisville as Central High School for Negro students. Several years ago it was purchased by the City of Louisville.

Present use: Storage room for the Louisville Free Public Library.

Note: The cupola which was originally on the building was almost a trademark of Shryock and of his master, William Strickland of Philadelphia. When the building was rebuilt by Whitestone he omitted the dome, added a balustrade around the roof, removed the basement windows and added small attic windows. Over the Ionic portico Whitestone put a triangular pediment where Shryock had the dome. He also reduced the windows from four to three on either side of the portico.
