DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The former United States Courthouse and Post Office in Martinsburg stands at the corner of West King and South Maple Streets and is free-standing. It is built of red pressed brick with stone trim, measures 83' (three-bay front) by 46' and is three and a half stories high with a tall slate-covered hip roof. The most conspicuous exterior features are the corbelled corner tourelles capped by conical roofs. These rise through the second and third floors, their roofs flanking the tall brick dormers centered on the four elevations. Fenestration is varied, some windows being roundarched and others rectangular. The former main entrance (now closed off) on King Street and the windows flanking it are set within heavy Romanesque arches. The present entrance is on Maple Street. Loading docks have been added at the rear and west end. The exterior design links second and third floor windows vertically on the south (King St.) and west elev ations, those windows being separated horizontally by pressed metal spandrels. The principal effect of the exterior is one of marked verticality, the floors being 15'9" high. Substantiality is the other striking characteristic immediately perceived. a It was not possible to inspect the interior, because the build-s ing houses aviation testing records which are apparently "top secret." Consequently, admittance is only allowed to specific authorized personnel. The following interior description is based on an interview with the supervisor of the Records Center, floor plans which he produced for examination and whatever visual inspection that could be made from the vestibule in which the interview was granted.

UCTIO Plans indicate the general arrangement of the interior, which has not undergone any significant structural alterations. Observable trim included portions of marble floor, tongue-and-groove dadoes, plaster walls, and cast-Z iron columns with Byzantine or Romanesque capitals. The main floor contained the public lobby and stairs, and the post office. A white pine screen separates or separated the 128' wide lobby from the postal work area. Stairs are in the southeast corner. The second floor housed six offices. The courtroom measured 33'6" x 46' and spanned the west end of the third floor. The court library and offices were on that floor. The judge's chambers and office had fireplaces. A central corridor ran east from the courtroom to the stair hall. Principal bearing walls are brick on the first floor. The rest of the framing is wooden.

The former United States Courthouse and Post Office in Martinsburg is an interesting example of the picturesque eclecticism favored for public buildings during the last quarter of the 19th century. A blend of "chateauesque" and "Romanesque" elements, the building is, while by no means advanced for its day or even particularly distinguished on its own terms, significant for its very typicality. It is precisely the kind of relatively large-scaled, substantial and rather impressive structure usually granted a population center with a then current census count of around 7,500. The authorship of the design may be attributable to Willoughby J. Edbrooke (1843-1896) who was Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department at the time the building was planned and erected. Edbrooke, a Fellow of the American Institute of Architects, favored a personal version of the Richardsonian Romanesque in On the other hand, the revised drawings on site are his government work. signed by the Assistant Supervising Architect, D. W. Aiken, to whom the smaller buildings to be planned may have been assigned. Another Treasury Depart ment architect who may have played a role in formulating the final plans is J. O'Rourke, Supervising Architect for a period from 1893-1894. Therefore, Edbrooke cannot be credited with sole authorship of the Custom House design. Variations on the initial scheme are evident in the finished product, especially in the treatment of fenestration on the corners and on the first floor where squareheaded windows have been combined with the round-headed windows of the original design. In 1894, there was some question over whether plumbing would be introduced in the building, contingent upon a sewage system being available.

The Martinsburg building is characteristic of the construction used in Government buildings of its time and the looming scale of its tall walls and high roof give dignity and importance to the intersection whereon the building stands.

The building was used for the purposes for which it was built from 1895 until 1961 when the courthouse and post office were moved to a nearby new Federal Building. The old Courthouse and Post Office now houses records and is not open to any but authorized personnel.
