DESCRIBE THE P	RESENT AND OR	GINAL (if kno	WD) PHYSICA

The Old Dutch Mill, which has been relocated in the city park at Wamego, is a circular structure measuring approximately 20 feet in diameter at the base and reaching a height of 40 feet. The walls are constructed of native limestone laid in a random ashlar pattern and taper in toward the top. The stones are irregularly coursed and are rough hewn giving a rustic, massive appearance to the mill. The roof is a truncated conical form with a penthouse-like structure on top. The top structure has a gable roof, and both roofs have wood shingles. A simple curved wooden facia denotes the line of the roof above the wall.

A four bladed windmill is attached to the roof on the west side. Window and door openings are simple rectangles with stone sills and lintels.

The mill is a fine example of Vernacular architecture as applied to an unusual function and is the only known stone windmill remaining in the state of this particular design.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Old Dutch Mill, now relocated in Wamego, was built in 1879 by a Dutch immigrant, John B. Schonhoff, on his farm twelve miles north of Wamego. It is said to be patterned after the hundreds of mills located along the Zuider Zee where Schonhoff learned milling techniques. All of the original machinery except the main shaft was constructed by Schonhoff at the site with a crude home-made forge. The main shaft was hauled from Leavenworth by wagon. Jim Chadwick, a Wamego stone mason, erected the 40-foot stone tower from soft, red sandstone quarried on the property. White limestone was used for trim and for the sculptured bust of Ceres, the goddess of grain, which was placed above the window of the mill.

The windmill did custom grinding of feed and flour for a short time, but the business was not successful enough to endure, and sometime in the late 1880's or early 1890's the Schonhoffs ceased operating the mill. In 1898 Ed N. Regnier purchased the farm, which became known as "The Stone Tower Farm." The mill sat idle until 1925 when members of the Wamego city park board suggested the Regniers donate the structure to the city. This was done and the mill was carefully moved, stone by stone, to a 25-foot mound built for the structure in the city park. The area people declared the moving day a holiday and closed shop to help transport the mill. A former Wamego citizen later donated $1,000 for the restoration of the wooden top and vanes.

Only a very few mills of this type were constructed in Kansas, and the Old Dutch Mill at Wamego is one of only two remaining in the state, both of which have been relocated in city parks. (The other one, however, is of frame construction.) In addition to being an unusual structure architecturally for Kansas, the Old Dutch Mill represents an effort of Kansas immigrants to incorporate their former life styles into a new mode of living. Because of the concern of local citizens, the mill will continue to show future generations the way of the past.
