DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Grove, which is constructed of red brick and faced with stucco in the portico area is typical of the Greek Revival style of architecture. Two-stories high with a basement, the house is two rooms deep off of a wide central hall. At the rear of the building is a one-story kitchen addition which replaced a porch and covered walkway leading to the original kitchen dependency.

The main facade consists of a simple but monumental four-columned portico with a fully pedimented gable. The columns are surmounted by a simple architrave and cornice of a strict Classic type, the latter of which encircles the entire house. The main entrance consists of double panelled doors with side lights covered by a transom all of which is framed by engaged columns and architrace. A second doorway identical to the first is located above it where a balcony was originally intended. The back corners of the portico are pilastered. The tall main facade windows are all six light sash with exterior louvered shutters. A brick staircase rises to the floor of the portico beneath which basement windows can be seen. The house has a hipped roof with four brick chimneys, one at each corner.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Grove was, originally constructed on property owned by Richard Keith Call. Call was introduced to Florida through his association with General Andrew Jackson, to whom he became an aide in 1818 and by whom he was regarded as a protege. Andrew Jackson served as the first territorial governor in the period from January 24, 1821, until the time of the first territorial elections in 1822 and was partially responsible for the introduction of Call into the political life of the new territory. In 1822, Call was. elected to serve as territorial delegate to the Congress of the United States from the recently organized territory In his position as territorial delegate, Call of Florida. sponsored a bill passed in May, 1824, by the 18th Congress which allotted a maximum of 640 acres of land to actual In 1825, Call resigned his position as Florida settlers. territorial delegate to become the Receiver of Public Monies for Florida (Associated with the Land Office). In 1825 he began construction on The Grove, on that property which adjoined the land set aside for the new capitol of Florida.

Richard Keith Call served as territorial governor from 1836 to 1839 and again from 1841 to 1844. He was general of militia in Florida and as such was involved with the Seminole troubles in 1835. As governor he was given command of all troops in Florida for several months in 1836 for a summer campaign but due to lack of training and experience and the resentment felt toward him by regular army men, he was a failure in this effort. This failure and other issues (political and financial corruption) were raised to aid in the defeat of Call when he made a bid for governor in 1845, the year Florida became a state. He continued to be a man of political importance, however, until the be ginning of the Civil War; after that time, Call faded from the public scene because of his prewar stance as a Constitutional Unionist.

The size and general design of the house, the construction of which Call supervised, were motivated by the rather romantic circumstances of Call's marriage to Mary Kirkman of Tennessee. Her family was hostile to Andrew

8. Significance

Jackson and opposed her marriage to the General's protege, Richard Call. She broke with her family in order to wed Call and the marriage ceremony took place in Jackson's home, The Hermitage. In order to compensate his new wife for the sacrifices she had made by leaving her wealthy family for his sake, Call was determined to build a large home in Florida. The date of the completion of the house has not been firmly established, even by Call's biographer, but it was in all likelihood not completely finished until a short time before Mary Kirkman Call's death in 1836. However, it may have been sufficiently completed for occupancy by the family as early as 1829

The house has remained in the hands of various descendants of Richard Keith Call; it is presently occupied by his great-granddaughter, who is the wife of former Florida Governor LeRoy Collins. The house was used as the Governor's Mansion for a time (1955-1957 during the first and part of the second terms of Governor Collins) while the present Florida Governor's home was being constructed nearby. Thus the house briefly regained its political significance.
