Condition: Excellent

Description: The Superintendent's Residence is a two-story masonry and stucco building in the Spanish-Pueblo Revival style. It has a flat roof with rounded parapets, and recessed metal casement windows with exposed wood lintels. The main entrance porch has round wood columns and corbels. Exterior details include a small wood balcony on the SE side of the building, and vigas extending through the outside walls between the first and second story. There has been an addition on the rear of the building, and the entire building was renovated in 1978 by Architect Charles Nolan. The original architect is unknown. The building dates from 1906, but portions of the building are believed to date before 1906. The original building was constructed in an "L" shape and retains its architectural integrity.

because it is the oldest building on campus, some portion of the building is thought to date from before 1906, and a residence stood at the present location when the school was authorized by the Territorial Government in 1887. Originally a farmhouse, this building is a very early example of Pueblo Revival Style architecture that has become well known as a New Mexican architectural style and made famous by architects such as John Gaw Meem and Gordon Street who worked for Meem prior to opening his own firm 1937. Street designed many of the buildings at NMSD. The Spanish Pueblo Revival Style of this building set the style for all buildings constructed at NMSD to present.
