The Elias Conwell House is located in Napoleon, Indiana, at the corner of Wilson Street and the Old Michigan Road. Built about 1822, the structure is a detached building of brick construction; the walls are laid in common bond. The two story structure has a full stone basement. The House has an "L" shape with the main elevation on the long leg of the "L". The roof consists of a hipped roof joined with a gable roof over the short leg of the "L". The close eaves are decorated with the brick dentils. There are three chimneys.

The Conwell House is an example of the Federal style of architecture. A principal feature of this style is the main entrance. The paneled door is flanked by side lights and fluted pilasters and capped by a fan light. The main facade has seven bays on the first and second stories. The ground floor bays have an unusual arrangement of entrances on each end with the main entrance in the bay just left of the center window. The windows in the front and side elevations have two over two lights. The short leg of the "L" has four bays on the second story and an entrance flanked by windows on the first level. Originally, there was another window on the ground level; however, this opening was removed when this section of the building was rebricked late in the Nineteenth Century. The windows on this west side have flat radiating voussoirs while the windows in the main elevation have wooden lintels. The windows in the rear have nine lights over six lights. The rear elevation has five windows and two doorways on the first story, and six windows on the second story.

There have been only two major alterations to the exterior. One was the removal of a window when a section of the west wall was rebricked. The other change was the conversion of one of the rear windows to a door in the late 1800's.

On the inside, a wide hall bisects the house. The entrance hall has a staircase with a cherry handrail and spindles. Fireplaces have classical and Adam-styled mantelpieces. Cherry, poplar and ash woods were used throughout the house.

A low stone wall extends across the south and west sides of the house.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT Elias Conwell

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Conwell House is significant as an intact example of Federal style architecture and as the home of one of Napoleon's earliest and most outstanding citizens. It is characterized by a remarkable purity of proportion and detail and has remained basically unchanged throughout the years. The main entrance has elements of the Federal style, but the arrangement of windows, side entrances and the off-center main entrance is unusual.

The house was built by Elias Conwell, who arrived in Aurora, Indiana, in 1819 and quickly became prominent in its public affairs. Born in Delaware in 1785, Conwell upon his arrival in Indiana established the first mercantile store in Aurora. He had a daughter who was married to James W. Gaff, a leading Ohio Valley industrialist and a brother of Thomas Gaff, who built Hillforest Mansion in Aurora (listed on the National Register).

Conwell moved to Ripley County and on September 24, 1821, bought 160 acres north of Wilson Street in Napoleon. He promptly built a brick kiln, brewery, and tanyard. He opened and operated a popular store at Wilson and Versailles Streets. These ventures were immediate successes, and Conwell used his new wealth to buy four town lots so he could build (about 1822) a large brick house at the corner of Wilson and Madison Streets. Conwell and his wife, Esther, a daughter of Charles Tatem of Cincinnati, made their house a center of refined hospitality, entertaining politicians and other notables.

Napoleon in the 1820's was the major point of entry for pioneers settling in Central Indiana. The town became a key stop on the Cincinnati to Indianapolis stage route, and several inns were opened to serve travelers. Conwell operated one of these inns.

Conwell lived in his large brick house until his death in 1862. In 1864 the property was sold to Henry D. Kanning. After Kanning's death in 1900, his heirs sold the property in 1905 to Grant Roberts. The property changed hands a number of times until it was acquired by the Gardners in 1976.
