Kinard House
Name of Property
Greenwood County, South Carolina
County and State

The Kinard House, at 227 West Main Street in Ninety Six, Greenwood County, South Carolina, was built ca. 1885 and is an excellent example of late nineteenth century Folk Victorian residential architecture with early twentieth century alterations.

The two-story gable-front-and-wing building has a five window bay façade with a central entry. A stone pier foundation supports the weatherboard-clad building. The original pressed metal shingle roof was replaced in 2003 with a sheet metal roof that simulates standing seam rolled roofing. The exterior detail includes sawn brackets at the frieze and soffits of the eaves and in the raking cornices of gables, boxed cornices with crown moldings and partial and fully-pedimented returns. All of the house's gables also feature a delicately-pierced sawn vergeboard. Most windows are six-over-six, double-hung sash. The main entry features double-leaf doors with two panel, the upper ones with arched heads, a four-light transom, four-light sidelights, underpanels, and an eared molded surround. To the right of the main entrance is a secondary entry, accessing the first floor room of the gable-front section. The gable-front exposure on the house's facade boasts an elaborately decorated polygonal bay window with interior shutters at the two smaller side windows.

The house was extensively altered ca. 1920 with a remodeling of the front porch and the addition of an exterior chimney on the east end elevation of the house. The front porch's turned and chamfered post supports were taken from the rear porch and set atop Craftsman styled stone piers, and the entire porch appears to have been expanded beyond and slightly around the east end of the house to create a porte cochere.

The interior chimney in the west area services four fireplaces: two flues each for the first and second stories. Another interior chimney, located between the east rear area and the perpendicularly-oriented rear ell, services two fireplaces. Both are original to the house. The eastern exterior end chimney was constructed during renovations ca. 1920. This chimney has two flues, one each for the first and second stories. None of the mantels that adorn the fireplaces are original to the house, but are period mantels that were purchased by the current owners. All original mantels were removed and sold by the previous owners.

The lower level of the house has a central hall plan with two rooms off the front central hall as well as two rooms off the rear central hall. The upper level has a central hall directly over the lower level front central hall. A two-story shed roofed addition, inclusive of a second-story sleeping porch, is attached to the rear of the main block. The house's main staircase [ca. 1920] is a reverse flight variety with landing and closed treads. Newels are boxed with simple caps and balusters are unturned with a simple handrail.

The front and rear west areas, as well as the entire second story, have heart pine floors. Beveled-glass French doors were placed between the two east area rooms on the first floor. A second set was placed between the central hall and the east front room. The heart pine floors of the east area were overlaid with two-and-one-half inch oak flooring. During these alterations, the stairway to the second story was moved from the front central hall area to the rear central hall area. The detached summer kitchen was then attached to the back of the house. The inside and outside porch was reconstructed in 1992.

Kinard House
Name of Property
Greenwood County, South Carolina
County and State

The Kinard House, on West Main Street in the town of Ninety Six, Greenwood County, South Carolina, is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C as an excellent example of Folk Victorian residential architecture of the late nineteenth century which utilizes decorative detailing on a simple house form. It is also significant for its association with Henry Jefferson Kinard and his son Drayton Tucker Kinard II, prominent businessmen and public servants who represented Ninety Six and Greenwood County in the South Carolina House of Representatives in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION:

This house was built ca. 1885 for Henry Jefferson Kinard (1849-1919) and was owned by his descendants until 1978. Kinard, the son of Drayton Tucker Kinard and Nancy Dominick Kinard, was an 1873 graduate of Wofford College and a farmer, merchant, and state legislator. He represented Abbeville County (Ninety Six was in Abbeville County until the creation of Greenwood County in 1897) in the South Carolina House of Representatives in 1892-93 and 1897-98 and represented Greenwood County in the House in 1901-02.¹ The Greenwood Index observed of Kinard's career as a state representative, "He was a thinker and was forceful on the stump. He served his county well and was one of the few legislators who kept close tabs on the State's appropriations. He was known all over the State for his watchfulness in this behalf."²

Kinard was also one of the leading proponents for the creation of Greenwood County from portions of Abbeville and Edgefield Counties. He and other prominent citizens of Ninety Six—a town established before the American Revolution which fell into decline after the war but was reestablished in the 1850s—proposed a new county as early as the 1870s, with Ninety Six as the new county seat. The Ninety Six faction initially encountered opposition from citizens of Greenwood, who wanted Greenwood to be the new county seat, but by the 1890s the two factions worked together to create the new county, with Greenwood as its seat, in 1897.³

Henry J. Kinard ran an unsuccessful campaign for State Railroad Commissioner in 1902, then retired from public life, serving as vice-president and on the board of directors of the Cambridge Bank in Ninety Six and on the board of directors of the Farmers and Merchants Bank of Greenwood. He lived in this house until his death in 1919 and was buried in Elmwood Cemetery in Ninety Six.

Henry J. Kinard's son Drayton Tucker Kinard II (1877-1922) was an 1898 graduate of Wofford College and a lifelong educator, teaching public school in the Pee Dee region of northeastern South Carolina and in Columbia, as well as at Clemson College (now Clemson University). After teaching several years in Dillon, South Carolina, D.T. Kinard became the superintendent of Dillon city schools and "became known throughout the state for his progressive methods.”⁴ He later moved to Laurens County, took up farming, and represented Laurens County in the South Carolina House of Representatives for one term, in 1919-1920.⁵ After he left the General Assembly in 1920 Kinard returned with his family to Ninety Six, moved into this house, and took over the management of his father’s estate; he made the significant alterations to the house about the same time. D.T. Kinard was elected president of the Cambridge Bank in Ninety Six shortly afterwards, a position he held at the time of his death. He lived in this house until his death in 1922, at the age of 44, after suffering severe injuries in a fire at the Cambridge Bank. An editorial in The Index-Journal observed, “Mr. Kinard was a citizen Greenwood County could ill afford to lose. He had character, energy and ability and these fine qualities he freely put at the call of his community, his county and his State.”⁶

The Kinard House eventually went to D.T. Kinard’s son Henry Hubert Kinard (1905-1970), and remained in the family until 1978.
