DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Navy Building 43: This building, approximately 40 feet by 70 feet, is built of locally-made reinforced concrete blocks, reinforced concrete sills and lintels, and cast metal pillars, on a poured reinforced concrete slab. Design was probably local. Roof is of corrugated iron. Roof beams (not seen) are probably either metal or concrete. Pillars support the outer edges of the roof over the lanais.

The exterior of the building is unchanged since construction in 1917. The 40-foot frontage on the main road contains a wide covered lanai, included under the same roof as the interior.

Interior changes in 1950 converted the Navy Commissary Store into the Post Office.

Concrete blocks in the walls are mortared. Each is about one-foot long, seven inches high, and an estimated eight inches thick. Blocks for the low wall which outlines the lanais, and on which the cast iron pillars rest, are each one foot high, two feet long and an estimated eight inches thick.

Faces of the lanai blocks are smooth, but faces of the wall blocks have been cast in a mold to present an exterior which resembles undressed quarried stone.

Buildings 38 and 43 represent a distinctive architectural style developed locally by the U.S. Navy in 1917 to solve local construction problems. The problems had been faced since early 1900, and in his report for 1916 for American Samoa the Secretary of the Navy wrote, "Concrete is recommended not only on account of its durability, but also because it can be made more easily rat proof." He was justifying the high construction cost.

The Poyer school at the head of Pago Pago bay, built in 1918, and buildings 38 and 43 are built of cast concrete blocks and still stand in 1971, a testimony of a wise 1917 decision. One central concrete casting plant, location unknown, probably supplied the blocks for these and other buildings. Cement, reinforcing material, and the cast iron pillars were probably imported from the U. S. Sand and water were available locally.

Note: Navy Building 43, the former Commissary Store and later the Post Office is apparently the second Navy building to carry the number. An earlier Building 43 was located by 1910 at the site occupied in 1970 by Buildings 27 and 56, Boathouse and Boatshed. The former Building 43 shows on a 1910 map, and a 1921 map dated June 30 and identified as Enlisted Men's Club House. The site of the earlier Building 43 was occupied by the boat house and shed by 1941. No available maps cover the 31-year period 1921 through 1941.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Short Statement: Tennis shoes, dried and canned provisions were among the items imported from the United States and sold in Building 43 to Naval personnel and their dependents 1917-1950 when it was the Commissary Store. After 1950 it became the Post Office, and in 1971 will become the Museum of American Samoa. It was built of concrete blocks and metal in 1917 to withstand Pago Pago bay's tropical conditions.

Complement of the Naval Station, Tutuila, probably did not differ materially during its half century of existence from that of 1926. World War I saw a modest buildup, and World War II an explosion of personnel and facilities. Except for these unusual periods, year after year the station probably had about the same as listed for 1926 -- 16 officers and 147 enlisted men, which included 70 Samoan men of the Fita Fita guard. There was also a station ship. In 1926 it was a Navy tug, with 54 enlisted men aboard. These naval personnel, and their dependents enjoyed certain privileges not granted to the civilians. Among these was access to the goods on the shelves of the Navy Commissary Store. These were goods from the United States, "home" for many of the customers, and the only local source of such goods in any quantity. "Provisions of all kinds, including meat and such other cold storage supplies as will stand the long haul from the United States are purchased from the Government Commissary. A wide variety of dried and canned provisions is carried," was the way it was put in 1926. Tennis shoes, for use on the station's three courts, were also listed.

Building 43, the Commissary Store, was probably built during the modest buildup of World War I. It's architecture and materials match that of Building 38, the radio station, which was specifically mentioned in the Navy Report for 1918 as built as part of the improvements at the Naval Station, Tutuila. Of the $23,491.01 spent, about $9,000 went for the radio station, leaving approximately $14,000 for other facilities. One was probably the Commissary Store. It served as such through 1950, until about the time the station was deactivated and control of American Samoa assumed by the Department of Interior.

With the need for a Commissary store gone, the well-built structure became the Post Office for American Samoa. Mail for both the Samoans and naval personnel had always been handled through the single office, which had informal branches at other villages on both Tutuila and the Manua islands. In 1926 the post office was listed as third class and was on the naval station. "Mails are received and dispatched (con't. on 10-300a) to San Francisco, Honolulu, Fiji, Sydney and Western Samoa every twenty-one days" (1926). In the 1940's the post office was located in Navy Building 19, just off the west end of the "parade grounds," more commonly called by its Samoan name for a village green -- Malae. There was also a "Post Office Pier" for handling mail bags between the office and vessels.

A new Post Office building is under construction in 1971. It is then planned to make Building 38 into the Museum of American Samoa.

Building 38 is one of at least two buildings left over from the Naval Station, Tutuila, which from their location, construction, materials, architectural interest, and use in historic times can continue in public use and serve as a reminder of the naval facility which once occupied what is now the business and government district of Tutuila.
