One of three notable women's academies established in 19th century Georgia, Lucy Cobb Institute consists of an entire city block and is the site of two notable structures: (1) Lucy Cobb Institute, the original structure built in 1858, and (2) Seney-Stovall Chapel, built 1882-1885. Mature oaks and spreading magnolias shade the grounds which through the years of the Institute's operation provided an opportunity for relaxation from studies to girls from many of the leading families of Georgia and elsewhere. The main building is still in use for faculty offices by the University while the chapel has been allowed to fall into disrepair. At this time the University is considering several plans for the use of these structures which would provide for their restoration.

Lucy Cobb Institute: Frederick Nichols has stated that the design of this structure "suggests the vigor with which all architectural problems were attacked in the decades immediately before the Civil War. This comment was in response to the triple Regency gables and the broad 100 foot expanse of the cast-iron verandah which contribute so much to the structure's character. Constructed of stucco over brick, the main body of this structure rises two stories above a ground-level basement with a third story, topped with Regency gable, above the central portion of the building. The verandah, on the level above the basement, is reached by a broad flight of wooden steps. On the verandah, the main entrance is Greek Revival with lights above and on the sides of the door while the pilasters supporting an entablature are detailed with an anthemion motif. Entablatures are over all main floor windows and all windows, with the exception of those opening onto the verandah which are twelveover-twelve, are six-over-six. There is a one-story porch on the rear with wooden post supports with a flight of steps to the ground level. Seney-Stovall Chapel: This orange-red brick structure is basicly octagonal in shape. The eight-sided structure rises two stories above a ground-level basement and is crowned with an eight-sided conical roof with brackets under the cornice. A section of the front "side" of the octagon projects outward several feet and rises above the roof line of the whole. topped with a gable. Here the main entrance is protected with a one-story gingerbread porch. Twin staircases to the ground level have been removed. Opposite the entrance, at the rear "side" of the octagon, a wing projects to house stage, dressing rooms, and storage area. The remaining six sides of the octagon feature an arrangement of three vertical windows, side-by-side, extending from just above the main floor level up to the cornice. The upper t of these window openings feature wood paneling with a raised design. The lower three quarters of the openings contain three sashes of four lights each. A brick stringcourse surrounds the octagon whose sides feature a recessed panel, leaving the corners of the octagon to appear as pilasters. The interior of Lucy Cobb Institute, while originally plain, has been modified for office use. The interior of the Chapel, featuring a balcony above the main floor, will require extensive restoration for use.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE (Include Personages, Dates, Events, Etc.)

Entitled, "Female Education in Athens," and signed by "mother", an article appearing in the Southern Banner in 1854 stated that "the female mind is susceptable to the highest state of cultivation," and pleaded for the establishment of an advanced educational facility for girls in Athens. This served as the impetus for the establishment of Lucy Cobb Institute, immediately interesting General T. R.R. Cobb and other Athenians. Through their efforts, $25,000 was immediately raised and a Joint Stock Company was created with subscriptions being paid in 1857 and 1858. Land for the school was purchased from the University, a building was erected in 1858, and classes began in January 1859. Lucy, one of General Cobb's daughters had died of scarlet fever in 1858 and the school was named in her memory.

In 1880, Miss Millie Rutherford began an association with the school, lasting for 48 years, when she became principal. In this period of years, she served as principal, teacher, president, and director. Under her administration the school grew and prospered while she authored several textbooks and acquired a nationwide reputation for her lectures in support of the Southern Cause. In addition, she organized a campaign to secure funds for a much needed chapel building. She asked students to write personal appeals to prominent philanthropists for aid and Miss Nellie Stovall, of Athens, chose George I. Seney of New York to receive her letter. Mr. Seney generously responded with a check for $10,000 and this with local funds constructed a chapel, designed by Athens architect W. W. Thomas. which was dedicated for use in 1885.

Due to financial difficulties, the school closed in 1931 and was later deeded to the University. Today, it symbolizes a high standard of achievement in the education of 19th century women and the contributions which they made to society. Notable alumnae include Caroline Patterson, first woman graduate of Mercer University; Moina Michael, originator of Poppy Day in memory of World War I casualties; Mrs. Emily White Fleming, founded or the Fredericksburg, Va. association for the preservation of historic sites; Mary Lyndon, first Dean of Women of the University of Georgia; and many others. Together Lucy Cobb Institute (the original building) and Seney-Stovall Chapel represent a netable educational achievement and serve not only as a landmark but as a valuable component of Athens' environment.
