DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The present Clark County Courthouse is the fourth such building to be erected on this site. The present Courthouse was designed by the Kentucky architect John McMurtry and constructed in 1853-1855. A west wing, approximately one-third the area of the original building, was added to the rear in 1938.

McMurtry was influenced by the Greek Revival style in creating this building. The Courthouse is a long, T-shaped, two-story with a basement, masonry structure. The front facade (east) is a wide, pedimented pavilion. The front entrance is a central distyle-in-antis Ionic portico. The roof is now topped with a slender, two-tiered clock tower. The original tower was three-tiered and capped by a golden dome and a weather vane. However, one tier was removed, to the detriment of the architectural design. The ground slopes in such a manner as to allow a twostory frontal elevation and a three-story rear elevation.

Although the building has been added to and remodeled several times, documented records indicate that the plan of the original building used the first floor as the courtroom and the second floor for the various county offices. The courtroom was arranged so that the spectators, jurists, etc., were seated to the left and the right (north and south) and the Judge's bench was in the center toward the west. It is interesting to note that all town elections were originally held in the courtroom. The town was divided into two precincts, therefore, one group took the north side and one group the south side. The courtroom was also used as the local opera house. Plays, musical programs and similar activities were held here. In 1889 the local court decided to move the courtroom to the second floor where it is presently located.

The exterior of the courthouse is finely detailed. The workmanship in the column capitals, the cornice, eaves, etc. is excellent. Symmetry was rigidly adhered to by McMurtry. Since the interior has been remodeled several times, one has to assume that the original interior work was of the same quality as the exterior. Presently, the basement and first floor levels are being used to house all the county offices and the second floor for the courtroom. The arrangement of these spaces leaves no evidence of the original plan. It is also apparent that those responsible for the various remodeling projects have had little regard for the craftsmanship exhibited in the original building.

The Clark County Courthouse is the fourth courthouse to stand on this site. The first building was a two-room log structure which cost a total of $16.00. The Clark County Court held its first session in this log building on July 22, 1794. The second courthouse of brick construction was completed in October, 1797. The third courthouse was completed in 1821.

When the 1821 structure was judged in dangerous and dilapidated condition, the fourth and present building, considered one of the most beautiful courthouses in the Blue Grass, was constructed. It was designed and built in 1855 by Kentucky architect John McMurtry, a one-time apprentice of architect Gideon Shryock, another Kentucky native.

Here in Clark County Henry Clay pled his first and last law cases. This case was the Joel Quisenberry will contest. Henry Clay was so feeble that he was granted permission to present the case seated at the table. Among his associate lawyers was the Honorable Richard French of Winchester.
