Old Town District includes portions of 59 blocks. It contains the major residential area of 19th Century Selma as well as portions of 16 blocks of the early commercial and public sections of the town. In the commercial and public blocks only two existing store buildings are said to have survived the disastrous fire which occurred April 2, 1865, when Selma fell to the Union troops. Therefore the existing commercial structures are of late-19th Century and turn-of-the-century vintage. Of the 117 structures in this section of the district, 70% appear to have been built before 1910. The majority are two-story brick, vaguely "Italianate" in architectural detail, and typical of the time period in many communities of this region. Ground floor facades have suffered successive "modern" alterations and individual treatment of adjacent stores has served, in some instances, to break the mass of some of the larger structures. Outlying shopping centers have caused some decay. Of the 30% presumed to have been built after 1910, many are also two-story brick commercial building. Thus their intrusive quality is not pronounced. The collection is sufficiently cohesive in similarity of height, scale, proportions, materials, textures, rhythm, silhouettes and siting to convey a strong sense of time and place, i.e., a small Southern town in the late 19th Century. Of the 5% judged intrusive, most are filling stations or garages where, in addition to height and material changes, the siting is at variance with the total scene. In the Old Town blocks and in the adjacent Water Street Historic District (NRHP 12/16/72) some rehabilitation has occurred in the last decade, returning a number of the 19th Century structures to their earlier form.

The strong 19th Century influence of the church on the spiritual, cultural and recreational life of the Southern community is well-illustrated by pivotal structures in the non-residential portion of the Old Town District. Four late-19th Century churches, including St. Paul's Episcopal (210 Lauderdale Street), built in 1875 by Richard and R. M. Upjohn (NRHP 3/25/75) and a fine 1908 Neo-Classic Carnegie Library (912 Selma Street), now vacant, surpass the commercial structures in their size, cost, architectural quality and associative values.

In the 43 primarily-residential blocks, a surprising unity has been maintained. Of approximately 450 structures, 303, or 67%, appear to have been built before 1910. Of these, 126, or 28%, have been judged to possess architectural and/or historic merit. Of the 177 "background" buildings, many conceivably would have been given a higher architectural rating in a community less rich in its architectural heritage. The great majority were built as dwellings and still remain single-family housing units. One- and two-story white frame houses predominate. The number of metal shingle roofs is a striking feature. While all the major architectural expressions of 19th Century architectural styles are represented, the vast number are late-19th Century houses with decorative jigsaw mill-work, usually lumped together as "Victorian". They create a flowing thread of unification. The majority of structures reflect a high standard of design quality and workmanship. The current maintenance level is excellent. Established trees shade the streets and sidewalks. The setback from the street is fairly uniform and both front and back yards are abundantly planted with the traditional Southern flora. Magnolias, oaks, pecans, fig trees, and honeysuckle vines flourish. Many properties are enclosed by cast iron fences and many back yards still contain outbuildings--former kitchens, stables and even an occasional pigeon cote. Alleys divide most blocks, the lots' sizes vary, thus decreasing the intrusive quality of a few now-vacant lots where older structures have been demolished.

The visual impact is not threatened where older buildings have been adapted for reuse as professional offices, schools and small retail shops. But the streetscape has been harmed where new commercial buildings, low and without visible roofs, have intruded into the neighborhood. The newer residences are less intrusive as they usually incorporate some of the more traditional architectural elements that surround them, though invariably at a reduced scale. The major intrusive elements are in the blocks closest to the river, nearer "downtown". This area also contains two Federally-owned structures: a one-story brick contemporary Post Office at 723 Alabama Street, and the former Post Office, now the Federal Building, at 910 Alabama Street (NRHP 2/26/76). Of the 450 structures in the residential blocks, a professional value judgement would rate 3% as intrusive.

Most of these 43 blocks possess a "pivotal building" established in its setting by linkage buildings of more modest quality. A sampling would include the Female Academy of the Central Masonic Institute of Alabama c. 1848 (former Vaughan Memorial Hospital, NRHP 6/75) at 109 Union Street; Sturdivant Hall, 713 Mabry Street (NRHP 1/18/73); 625 Lauderdale Street, a two-story brick house c. 1868 in the Gothic Revival Style; 603 Alabama Street, 329 Mabry Street and 816 Alabama Street, all examples of raised cottages built in the 1840's and 1850's; and 623 Selma, 439 Lapsley, respectively frame and brick examples of the Greek Revival columned mansions. Examples of "linkage" structures are: 10-12 Broad Street c. 1860 two-story brick commercial building in Italian Gothic style; 618 Tremont Street, one-story frame cottage c. 1870, Italianate; 413 Lauderdale, two-story frame, late 19th Century.

Of the 126 buildings judged to possess architectural and/or historic merit, most have strong local associative values and as many have known few changes of ownership, they have suffered few alterations. The 177 judged to have minor architectural merit are still valuable to the "tout ensemble" which makes the Old Town District of Selma a neighborhood of high aesthetic quality and which gives a sense of orientation, of time and place, in our mobile society. As the pace of urbanization accelerates, inclusion in the National Register and municipal regulatory ordinance can diminish the mounting threat to Selma's environmental heritage.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Old Town Historic District contains 59 blocks of downtown Selma and encompasses the major residential area of 19th Century Selma, as well as a major portion of the early commercial and public sections of town. While all of the major architectural expressions of 19th Century architectural styles are represented, the vast number of structures date from the late 19th Century. One- and two-story frame houses with decorative jigsaw mill working, reflecting a high standard of design quality and workmanship, predominate in the residential section; while, in the commercial areas, the majority of the structures are two-story brick with a vague Italianate association.

Selma, incorporated in 1820, derived its name from the Songs of Selma, a poem in an immensely popular 18th Century book the Poems of Ossian. This supposed translation of a Gaelic manuscript was proved later to be one of the master hoaxes of literary history. Cahaba, 11 miles to the southwest was then the capital of Alabama. Some of the illustrious public figures in the state and nation's history at this time were also the developers and prominent public figures in the early history of Selma. William Rufus King is perhaps the most notable example. He served both North Carolina and Alabama in the Federal House of Representatives and Senate. He also served both states in their legislative bodies. He led diplomatic missions in Italy, Russia and France and was elected Vice President of the United States, the only Vice President in our history to take the oath of office outside the nation's territorial limits (Cuba). He was among the organizers of the "Selma Land Company." There he made his home from 1819 until his death in 1853. He is buried in the Live Oak Cemetery.

Examples of early building in Selma include 401 Lauderdale Street and 624 McLeod Street. Both are in the Federal Style as it appeared in central Alabama in the 1820's.

The 1850 Selma Census records 973 white and 1,100 Negro inhabitants. By 1860 there were 1,809 whites and 1,368 blacks. Ante-bellum Selma was second only to Montgomery as the state's leading cotton market. It was the commercial and market center of cotton-rich Dallas County and the surrounding wealthy agricultural region. The Alabama River and numerous railroad lines made it an important distribution center.

It is this period of wealth, culture and opulence that produced Selma's magnificent Greek Revival mansions. The most noted example is Sturdivant Hall at 713 Mabry Street (NRHP 1/18/73, HABS).

During the Civil War, Selma was a major military manufacturing depot and transportation center for the Confederacy. The Naval Foundry produced cannon, shot, machinery and a number of ironclad warships, including the heavily-armored Tennessee. The Army Arsenal produced cartridges, powder and small arms. Although these installations were well-fortified, they were destroyed when Selma fell to Union troops in April, 1865. This engagement left a burning, demoralized community as the drunken Federal troops under General J. H. Wilson "looted, burned, robbed, raped, and murdered." Notable men of the Confederate period included Lt. Catesby ap Roger Jones, who had commanded the Confederate ironclad Merrimac in its well-known battle with the Monitor in Hampton Roads, the engagement which foretold the end of wooden warships. A descendant of Jones occupies a c. 1850 Greek Revival dwelling at 629 Tremont Street. This home descended to the present owners through the heirs of the first owner, Dr. Albert Gallatin Mabry.

Dr. Mabry practiced medicine and served in the Alabama Legislature. It was during his terms in the legislature that he became a part of the movement that was responsible for the establishment of the State's first hospital for the insane--one of the earliest institutions of this type in the nation.

Confederate General Edmund Winston Pettus became a United States Senator, as did Confederate General John Tyler Morgan, who also has the distinction of being recognized as the "father of the Panama Canal." Morgan's 1859 Greek Revival home at 719 Tremont Street is now owned by the Alabama Historical Commission (HABS, NRHP 9/27/72).

By 1870 the population totaled 6,484 of whom 2,824 were white, 3,660 black. The number of imposing residences in the Old Town District built after the Civil War attests to the resiliency of a citizenry who rebuilt from the rubble, survived Reconstruction, and resumed political leadership in the state and commercial ascendancy in the region.

Examples of postwar buildings include the Gothic Revival Keith Home c. 1880 at 711 Alabama Street, now adapted to law offices; the two-story frame Italianate dwelling, with its ornate pigeon cote, that was built in 1865 by Mayor Joseph Perkins; and the Ernest Lamar home at 327 Church, a two-story brick Queen Anne Style dwelling c. 1900, overwhelming with its bulbous porch columns, turreted bay, jigsaw-trimmed balcony, wide-bracketed cornice and beveled. Reaction to such exuberance must have influenced the restrained, studied Neo-Classic Plant home c. 1920 at 725 Dallas Street, with its Ionic-columned portico symmetrically framed by French doors whose arched fanlights are repeated in the fanlight of the stately entrance.

In the mid-1960's Selma became the focus of national attention for the Civil Rights movement, and events there led to the passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965. Today the population of Selma is approximately 30,000 people, about equally divided in race. There are numerous small industries and the city is still a distribution and market center for the entire county. However, since World War II the major payroll has been provided by Craig Air Force Base. This Federal installation brought a gigantic influx of population in the 1940's, putting many stresses, tangible and intangible, on the pre-war community. Many of the existing visual depredations can be traced to this event. Currently, Craig Field may be closed, a loss which portends economic crisis. Tourism can and should be recognized as one alternate industry. This industry in Selma would be based on the abundance of 19th Century architecture still extant. These buildings, with their surrounding amenities of yards, streets, fences and planting, constitute a neighborhood that continues an identity and a specificity of time and place.

The appearance of a town reflects the history of the culture that created it. Here in the Old Town District one sees physical manifestations of a culture that produced a significant and impressive number of individuals who were leaders in the state and nation. Its preservation is important to Selma's future and well-being.

As described in the current documentation, the period of significance for the Old Town Historic District does not clearly cover the late 1920s or the 1930s. However, 119-121 Broad Street -- the former Kress Building -- was constructed in 1930-31 and is an exceptional local example of Art Deco influences. With the exception of Bendesky's on Alabama Avenue, a Carrara glass fronted building with hard-edged geometric design, the Kress Building is Selma's only commercial building that reflects the impact of the modern styles -- Art Deco, Moderne and International -- of the early 20th century. The Kress Building exhibits many of the characteristics of Art Deco -- geometric patterning, highly polished surfaces, colored terra cotta tile, stylized floral motifs, and luxurious materials like marble and granite. Designed for Kress by E. F. Sibbert, it is one of six known buildings in Alabama constructed for the national chain.

The commercial and architectural significance of the district in the 20th century will be investigated in the future, at which time the commercial significance of the building will be assessed.
