Roselawn, as an unusual example of the organic growth of a Victorian house, described on the facing page, is only surpassed by the fact that it was the home of Sam Jones, evangelist.

Samuel Porter Jones, bern in Oak Bewery, Alabama, October 16, 1847, led a rather dissipated life until his conversion in 1872. His mother died when he was nine years old and in 1861 his father, a Cartersville, Georgia lawyer, left to fight for the Confederacy, the compounding result of which left Sam Jones in a less than stable state. He started school once again when his father returned from the War; he attended the school of Honorable W.H. Felton and later Euharlee High School, but his health prevented his continuing with college. He eventually studied law and was admitted to the Bar, but with his continued drinking, within a few years he was destitute. His father died in August of 1872 and on his death bed he made Sam promise to meet him in heaven. From that day on he lived by that promise. after his conversion he was called upon to preach in his grandfather's church; by October of 1872 he was licensed to preach by the North Georgia Conference and was to serve circuits in Polk, Floyd, Newton, and Jasper Counties. 1881 he was appointed agent for the North Georgia Orphan's Home, saving it from financial ruin by his evangelistic messages and personal magnetism.

His first recognition from the newspapers was during a revival meeting in Memphis, Tennessee, in January, 1883, which laid the foundation for his fame as a pulpit orator. His most remarkable revival was in Nashville, Tennessee, where the Ryman Auditorium (now the Grand Old Opera House) was erected to accommodate the crowds who came to hear him preach. It was built by Captain Ryman, a convert of Jones' preaching.

Sam Jones' lectures and revivals covered the United States and parts of Canada. He won fame that no other evangelist has attained, though many have tried to imitate him. His influence has been admitted by the most distinguished clergymen in the United States. He still is the most quoted preacher by the masses who has ever lived in America, and is recognized as a most unique speaker. His originality, his splendid flow of English and style of sweeping human emotions at will were peculiarly his own; stinging sentences and tongue lashings from him were accepted as a matter of fact.

Several times he had chances to make his home elsewhere, but always made his home in Cartersville where he was active in all civic affairs. He was instrumental in advancing the mineral interest in the county and became a large property owner. During his lifetime he made over three-quarters of a million dollars, his wealth displayed in the Victorian grandeur of his home, Roselawn.

8. Significance (Sam Jones House, Roselawn)

Sam Jones died in 1906; a train draped in black brought his body to Cartersville and on to the Capitol in Atlanta where his body lay in state.

The City of Cartersville desires to restore the Sam Jones House for use as a museum and community meeting facility. The city with the help of the local area planning and development commission has applied for a HUD grant to adapt the house for this use. The Georgia Historical Commission meeting as a board of review recommended that the Sam Jones House be nominated to the National Register with the caution that the federal funds used in this adaptive development of the property not have adverse affect on the historical integrity of the site. It is proposed that the grounds around the structure, which constitute a full city block, will be used as a passive park area and the out buildings including the carriage house, kitchen and study will possibly be developed for new civic uses. However, the same admonition given by the Georgia Historical Commission on the use of federal funds for the main house likewise applies to these outbuildings.
