Describe present and historic physical appearance.

The Old North Knoxville Historic District is in Knoxville, Knox County, Tennessee. It is located north of downtown Knoxville, and is one of a ring of suburbs that developed in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. These suburbs surrounded downtown Knoxville in a semi-circular pattern to the west, north and east of downtown, bounded by the Tennessee River on the southeast. The Old North Knoxville Historic District comprises much of the area that was the independent municipality of North Knoxville, which was annexed by Knoxville in 1891. The district is an irregular area, almost triangular in shape, with Broadway, Woodland and Central Avenues at its outer perimeter.

There are 521 buildings in the district, 495 of which are contributing. Non-contributing buildings total 26. The number of buildings breaks down to 391 primary buildings and 130 secondary buildings. 374 of the primary buildings are contributing and 17 non-contributing. 121 of the secondary buildings contribute to the district; 9 are non-contributing. The non-contributing primary structures and secondary buildings are located randomly within the district, and are the result of inappropriate rehabilitation or new construction. There is one contributing structure, the paving material called "Granitoid" pavement on Kenyon Street; the pavement stretches throughout the district, from Folsom Street to Broadway.

Knoxville is located in the ridge and valley section of Tennessee, geologically characterized by ridges which run in an west/southwest to east/northeast direction. The sizes of houses in the district are mixed. Most of the largest homes in the district are located along Armstrong, East Scott and East Oklahoma Avenues, along one of these ridges. Glenwood and Kenyon cross the ridges at the northern end of the district, and are also the location of larger homes. All of these houses were built for managers, attorneys, doctors and other professional occupants. The homes along East Baxter Avenue,

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

The Old North Knoxville Historic District is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places under criteria A and C. Areas of significance include architecture, reflected in the designs of George F. Barber, Charles Barber and David Getaz, and in Queen Anne, Folk Victorian, and other Victorian styles, and the Neoclassical and other revival styles in the district. Community planning and development is demonstrated in the design of streets, building lots and public improvements in Old North Knoxville. The development pattern reflects the reliance of the developing neighborhood on public transportation (streetcars). The completeness of the public improvements was unique for an area developed in Knoxville during this time period. The area included in this nomination has been known as Old North Knoxville for over twenty years, and is very recognizable.

Original settlement of North Knoxville began in the 1850's. Following the Civil War, Knoxville began rapid economic development. Transportation, particularly rail transportation, brought prominence in wholesaling to the city. Manufacturing, particularly of iron products, pharmaceuticals and textiles, gave additional impetus to economic growth. This economic growth in turn spurred a residential building boom, reflected in the homes of Old North Knoxville.

North Knoxville was incorporated on January 16, 1889. Its original boundaries included an area of 575 acres, much larger than the present Old North Knoxville. One of the boundaries was Woodland Avenue, which remains a boundary of the present Old North Knoxville neighborhood association. Other boundaries included approximately the present Interstate-75, Jennings Street, Broadway Avenue, Jefferson Avenue, Eighth Avenue, Cecil Street and Bluff Street. Included in this area was what is now the Fourth and Gill Historic District (NR 4/29/86).

East Anderson Avenue, and some other streets, usually at lower elevations, were built for mill workers and laborers. In architectural detailing, the houses reflect the styles popular in Knoxville from approximately 1890 to 1930.

There are several rectangular grid street patterns within the district, at the meeting points of the original subdivisions which form the area. The street grid is a reflection of a "streetcar suburb" pattern of development. Blocks were divided into lots with a service alley bisecting each block. The longest sides of the block were oriented toward streetcar lines along Broadway, which provided transportation and influenced the neighborhood's development in its earliest years.

The pedestrian influence on the development pattern can be seen in small front yards (usually 25 to 30 feet in depth), in sidewalks (which are not common in Knoxville's newer areas), and in details such as inlaid brass street names. Many yards feature short retaining walls at the sidewalk edge. These may be built of poured concrete or stone or brick masonry. Mature trees are common in the area, and residential lots are usually heavily landscaped. Some streets in the southern part of the district still boast their original brick gutters and stone curbs. A distinctive paving pattern can be found along Kenyon Street in the northern portion of the district. Known locally as "singing pavement" for the noise created by tires traveling across it, it was marketed as Granitoid pavement. It is a poured concrete material with parallel grooves forming a rectangular pattern. Markers still existing in the street note that it was patented June 4, 1907 by the R. S. Blome Co. of Chicago, Illinois. (C)

The secondary buildings in the area served as carriage houses, garages or servants' quarters. A commercial building, a neighborhood grocery store, is still in use. Non-contributing outbuildings include sheds, garages and carports. Churches and apartment buildings and a seed packing plant, are other non-contributing buildings present in the district.

Residential resources in the Old North Knoxville District were built between 1890 and 1940. They represent the architectural styles that were prevalent in Knoxville during that time period. Good representation of the Queen Anne style can be found in the James Eugene Fair House at 241 East Scott Avenue and Lou-Mar, 505 East Scott Avenue. Eastlake detailing is exhibited at 1411 Armstrong Avenue, while other Victorian influences can be found at the W. R. Cooper House, 1212 Kenyon Street (Folk Victorian), 122 E. Anderson Avenue (Folk Victorian) and 1424 Folsom Avenue (Queen Anne Cottage). These homes represent Old North Knoxville's earliest development. Later styles include many of the "revival" styles of architecture. Neoclassical is represented by the James B. Dunn House, 1424 Armstrong Avenue. Other residential styles include American Four Square (the Ferguson-Faulkner House, 1523 Fremont Place), Craftsman (1117 Harvey Street), Colonial Revival (Frank Clark, Jr., House, 517 East Oklahoma Avenue), Tudor Revival (1355 Armstrong Avenue and the Anderson House, 523 Scott Avenue), and Dutch Colonial Revival (1365 Armstrong Avenue). Commercial styles include Victorian Vernacular Commercial (114 E. Anderson Avenue) and Commercial Vernacular (323 E. Anderson Avenue). The Shingle style is represented by 229 East Scott Avenue, and Shingle influence is seen elsewhere in the district mixed with other primary styles. There is one house of French Eclectic style in the district, at 518 Glenwood Avenue.

Many of the houses in Old North Knoxville were undoubtedly designed by an architect, but records attributing architectural design credit have not been found for most of them. However, the district does have the distinction of containing homes designed by George Barber (Pinecrest, 131 East Scott Avenue) and his son, Charles Barber (518 Glenwood). The district also contains a home designed by David Getatz (Lou-Mar, 505 East Scott Avenue).

The district's boundaries are defined by development patterns rather than by geographic characteristics. At the west, along Central Avenue, the edge is set by development patterns, which even originally, placed commercial uses at that edge. On the northwest edge, East Woodland Avenue is a traffic collector and an original boundary of the municipality of North Knoxville. Smaller houses, somewhat later in construction time and very different in character, are located to the northwest of Woodland. Broadway is a major traffic arterial, and has long been given to commercial and institutional uses. The commercial and institutional uses along Broadway and Central have spread into the neighborhood by at least a half-block, sometimes more. Those commercial uses have also been affected by inappropriate new construction, demolition for parking lots, or rehabilitation. For this reason, the district's boundaries have been set to exclude those properties along Central and Broadway. The boundaries in this district capture the uniquely styled houses which formed a large part of the municipality of Old North Knoxville.

The information contained in this nomination was first compiled by the Knoxville-Knox County Metropolitan Planning Commission as part of a county-wide historic sites inventory conducted from 1982 through 1986. The Old North Knoxville Historic District was determined eligible for the National Register of Historic Places by MPC staff during the preparation of the Cultural Resources Plan for Knoxville and Knox County, Tennessee, which was completed in 1988. That information was updated and expanded by additional research in preparing this nomination. Much of the enhanced information was made available by individuals who live in the Old North Knoxville Historic District and are members of the Old North Knoxville Neighborhood Association. The maps supplied with the nomination are products of the Geographic Information System of Knoxville and Knox County; this mapping system will eventually become the tax mapping system, as well as be used for other purposes. The map illustrates streets, house numbers, lot lines, building footprints and shrubbery and trees. Inventory numbers and other designations have been recorded on the base map.

Included as a continuation of this architectural description is a glossary. The glossary provides a more comprehensive description of the details and styles that typify the Old North Knoxville Historic District.

Following the glossary is a description of the properties that are included in this nomination, listed by street address and inventory number. The inventory number was assigned for use in this nomination only. Properties are designated as (C) and (NC). Those designated with a (C) are contributing, and are considered significant to the historic and architectural character of the district, and the contextual development and evolution of the district through time. Non-contributing resources are designated

United States Department of the Interior
National Park ServiceNational Register of Historic Places

(NC). They have little or no compatibility with the character reflected in the district's buildings, either because their construction is of recent vintage and is incompatible in massing, design or use of details, or because their original appearance has been altered by insensitive rehabilitation. Some of the buildings currently noted as non-contributing could, if carefully rehabilitated, have that non-contributing designation reversed.

GLOSSARY OF HISTORIC ARCHITECTURAL STYLES IN PROPERTY INVENTORY:
OLD NORTH KNOXVILLE HISTORIC DISTRICT

The Old North Knoxville Historic District contains distinctive architectural styles that date from the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. In order to facilitate describing the structures and better portray the architectural styles existing in the district, a glossary describing prevalent styles and their distinguishing characteristics appears below. Sources which were used to compile the glossary include A Field Guide to American Houses, by Virginia and Lee McAlester, Guidelines for Completing National Register of Historic Places Forms, National Register Bulletin 16, compiled by the National Park Service, U. S. Department of the Interior, American Architecture Since 1870: A Guide to Architectural Styles, by Marcus Whiffen, Victorian Commercial Architecture in Indiana, published by the Historic Landmarks Foundation of Indiana, and Identifying American Architecture by John J. G. Blumenson.

Late 19th Century Styles - Old North Knoxville Historic District.

Queen Anne: Elaborate decoration on all exterior surfaces is a chief characteristic of Queen Anne design, as are irregular floor plans. Steeply pitched complex roof shapes are usually found, and may be surfaced with colored slate laid in patterns, or with textured terra cotta tiles. Patterned shingles are often used on walls. Bays, bay windows and oriel windows emphasize the irregular shape of these buildings. The front facade is asymmetrical. Full or partial length porches, or wrap around porches, are common. Turrets and balconies are found on these houses. Porch columns are usually turned or chamfered, with trim of elaborately sawn wood, lacy spandrels, spindle work, beaded balusters, and ornamented attic vents or windows. Two over two double hung windows are common. Leaded and stained glass may be used in the upper sash of double sash windows, as well as in transoms and sidelights. One common window form, the Queen Anne window, consists of a double hung window with an upper sash of small square panes around a large square central pane. This upper sash is usually combined with a lower sash of one large or two smaller vertically divided panes, although some examples may have both upper and lower sashes of the same pattern.

Eastlake: The Eastlake style was used at the same time as the Queen Anne, and is similar to it in massing. However, it appears to be more vertical than the Queen Anne styles, without the Queen Anne style's elaborate bays and oriel windows. Window styles are identical to those of Queen Anne buildings. Wood trim is more massive and robust than Queen Anne detailing, with bargeboard, door and window trim being characterized by applied bull's eyes, rosettes, or applied "x" shapes. Trim was usually formed by a chisel or gouge, or a lathe, rather than a scroll saw. Rows of spindles, beaded spandrels, and brackets are common.

Folk Victorian: The facades of Folk Victorian houses may be asymmetrical, and usually highlight a front gable. Spindle work details and spandrels, as well as jig-sawn trim, are used often, and trim details are usually derived from Queen Anne styles. The trim is much less elaborate than that found on a Queen Anne style. The roof is usually a gable roof. Porches are full or nearly full length, with simple chamfered or turned posts. Windows are double hung, often with two over two glazing. The Folk Victorian house may be either one or two stories.

Queen Anne Cottage: The Queen Anne Cottage grew out of the Queen Anne style, and is a builder form of that style. One story in height, and asymmetrical, it is usually marked by a hip and gable roof, corbelled interior chimneys, and sawn wood ornamentation. The Queen Anne Cottage often has a full or three-quarter front porch, which sometimes wraps to one side; the porch roof is supported by wooden columns which may be turned or chamfered or, less commonly, rounded. Post brackets, sawn wood or louvered attic vents, and spindle work balustrades are often found. Windows are usually double sash, with either two over two or one over one panes. However, the upper sash may be a Queen Anne design of leaded or stained small panes. These small panes may also be found in transoms or sidelights. A "cottage" window may also be used on the front facade, and is a fixed shallow upper pane (either plain or with geometric patterns) above a fixed lower sash. Wall coverings are usually weatherboard. There may be patterned wood shingles in gables, and the roof covering may be of patterned asbestos shingles.

Shotgun: The term "shotgun" applies to a floor plan arrangement in which the rooms of the house open in succession from front to rear without a separate hallway. The term "shotgun" comes from the description that a shotgun could be fired in the front door and all of the shot would exit through the rear doorway without hitting any intervening walls. Front gable roofs are common on the shotgun house, which usually has a full or three-quarter front porch. The houses usually provided worker housing. Trim is not elaborate, and may be either from the Victorian era or from the later Craftsman period. Window pane configuration reflects the style with which the house is detailed.

Shingle: The Shingle house is usually two or three stories tall. In its pure form, it has a uniform covering of wood shingles from roof to foundation walls, with no corner boards. The sweep of the roof often continues to form porch roofs and the roof is steeply pitched. Multiple porches are common. Casement or sash windows may be used, they are often grouped into twos or threes. The Shingle style borrowed elements from other styles: the Queen Anne contributed wide porches and asymmetrical forms; the Colonial Revival contributed adapted gambrel roofs, classical columns and Palladian windows; and Richardsonian Romanesque added an emphasis on irregular, sculpted shapes.

Early 20th Century Styles - Old North Knoxville Historic District

Italian Renaissance Revival: This style of building features low-pitched hipped or flat roofs. Hipped roofs are covered by terra cotta or cement tiles. Arches above doors or windows, or on porches, are common. A symmetrical facade and recessed entry porches are used. This style is less common than Craftsman, Tudor or Colonial Revival styles. Windows are usually double hung, with multiple panes in the upper sash and one pane in the lower.

Prairie: The Prairie style feature low-pitched roofs, often hipped, with wide overhanging eaves. One story porches, wings, and other detailing strengthen the horizontal lines of the building. Front porches often have massive, square porch columns or piers, often of masonry. The upper sashes of windows, as well as transoms and sidelights, often show geometrically patterned small panes and are called Prairie windows in this nomination.

Craftsman: Buildings of this style usually have low-pitched gable roofs with wide eave overhangs. Roof rafters are usually visible, and decorative beams and knee braces are widely used. Porches usually stretch across all or most of the front facade, with a roof supported by tapered or square columns, or by posts resting on piers or a balustrade. Dormers are used extensively. Weatherboard is a common wall surface material. Windows are usually double hung, with the upper sash having three, four, or more panes, while the lower sash has one.

Bungalow: The Bungalow house is usually one or one and one-half stories in height. It uses a rectangular plan, which might have been modified by later additions. There are fewer embellishments than found on Craftsman houses. In addition, the Bungalow most often has a front gable roof. There is usually a full or three-quarter front porch, with simple wood or brick columns and without a balustrade. Windows are usually double hung one over one sash, with the windows being shorter and wider than the windows of houses from earlier design eras.

Tudor Revival: Steeply pitched roofs, usually gabled, characterize the Tudor Revival style. Half-timbering, tall, narrow windows and massive chimneys are also common. The style was common in early twentieth century suburbs.

Colonial Revival: The characteristics of the Colonial Revival style include pediments supported by pilasters or porticos supported by slender columns at the main entry. The front facade is usually symmetrical, with a central entry, which often has a fanlight or sidelights. Windows have double hung sashes, usually with multiple panes.

Dutch Colonial Revival: The Dutch Colonial Revival building is a variation of the Colonial Revival style marked by its use of a gambrel roof, with the gambrel end facing either the front or side of the building. Other characteristics of the Colonial Revival period apply, with pediments or porticos as entries, double hung multiple pane windows, and a symmetrical facade.

Neoclassical: Facades of Neoclassical houses may feature columns the full height of the two-story building; however, one-story cottages are also present. A full or partial-width porch with columns may be found. Symmetrical front facades and multiple-pane glazing in double sash windows are usually present on the front facade.

American Four Square: This house style was used from the 1900's until the 1930's, and is recognized by its square appearance and often hipped, pyramidal roof. Front dormers are often used. It is almost always two or two and one-half stories in height, and interior spaces are often arranged into four main, square or nearly square, spaces. A full front porch is most common in these buildings. Detailing on the house may be from any of the styles common in the early twentieth century. It is common to find sidelights and transoms on a American Four Square, and these may be of leaded, stained or beveled glass. Double hung windows are usually used, and they may have a patterned upper sash or may be in a one over one configuration.

Minimal Traditional: This style was dominant after the 1920's, and has a conservative, simple form of detailing. Eaves are usually flush, roof shapes are low-pitched, and porch hoods or covered porticos are common. Windows are usually double hung, with multiple pane glazing in each sash. Facades may be either symmetrical or asymmetrical.

French Eclectic: This style is based on precedents provided by French domestic architecture. The style may be symmetrical, asymmetrical or towered, usually displays brick, stone or stucco wall cladding, flared eaves, and a tall, steeply pitched hipped roof. Doors may be in arched or flat openings. Windows may be either double hung or casement windows. If they are casement sashes, they may have small leaded panes. French doors are often used.

No Style: Some residential buildings in the Old North Knoxville Historic District are referred to as "No Style." They are of varying ages, and use a wide range of materials in their construction. Some of them were built without architectural ornamentation, so that while their massing, window configuration, or age may link them with earlier styles, they do not possess qualities of that style themselves. Others may have been an architectural style common in the period when they were built. However, the stylistic details that linked them with that style have been removed over the years, so that no distinctions remain.

Commercial Styles - Old North Knoxville Historic District:

Victorian Vernacular Commercial: This style was common between 1880 and 1915. These buildings are simple stores, offices, factories and other structures divided into rectangular structural bays with large glazed front windows to admit light. They do not have the ornamentation which characterizes other buildings of the same time period, but there are stylistic characteristics of the period. Common to the style are pressed metal cornices with brackets, simple window hoods, and some decorative brick or stone work.

Commercial Vernacular: Commercial buildings in this style have been built since around 1910. They are similar structurally to Victorian Vernacular Commercial - utilitarian structures divided into rectangular bays, usually with large glazed front openings to admit light. However, they have little or no applied ornamentation or decorative stone or brick work.

Even before incorporation, North Knoxville was thought of as a desirable residential area. The suburb had smaller areas of deterioration than others, and travelers were not required to cross deteriorated areas to reach Knoxville. There was a school in North Knoxville which was well thought of. Area residents included company presidents, business owners, lawyers, doctors, contractors, teachers, college professors and railroad officials. In fact, a two block area on Glenwood Avenue was known as "Doctors' Hill" because nearly every home lining the street was occupied by a physician. North Knoxville was known as a middle class area with public spirited citizens.

Residents of Old North Knoxville have included George Dempster, Co-founder of Dempster Bros. and inventor of the Dempster Dumpster, and a Mayor/City Manager of Knoxville from 1929-31, 1935-37, 1945-46 and 1951-55. Richard Halliburton, well known explorer and author, lived here for a time. Other local businessmen who were residents of the Old North Knoxville neighborhood included William T. Lang, Manager of Brookside Mills and Benjamin A. Morton, President of H. T. Hackney Co., who was also a Mayor of Knoxville from 1923-27. A number of officials with the Southern Railroad included Hiram Musick, W. M. Million, A. H. Miller and Lemuel Smiley. Samuel Pope from Sanford, Chamberlain & Albers Co., drug manufacturers, was a neighborhood resident. Numerous attorneys, doctors and teachers also lived in the neighborhood.

North Knoxville elected its first city council in February of 1889. The municipality had private contracts for a water supply which was said to be superior Knoxville's source. It provided improved streets, street cars and fire protection. A city hall, fire hall and school facilities for approximately 100 students were located at 977 Gratz Street, with another school on Alexander Street at Pearl Street accommodating 600 students (both located outside the present Old North Knoxville Historic District). Electric arc lights were installed in 1899, and gas lines were provided for private customers. A city sewer system was planned, but not built before annexation by Knoxville. Knoxville annexed North Knoxville in 1897. All of these improvements make Old North Knoxville unique to suburban development of this era. While other areas may have featured some of these improvements, no other suburban development in the late 19th century boasted of streets, public transportation, fire protection, municipal and school buildings and electric lights. The improvements are illustrative of Old North Knoxville's singular historical planning and development.

One interesting feature which remains from Old North Knoxville's early days is the pavement on Kenyon Street, which is known locally as the "singing street". The pavement on that street was laid by the R. S. Blome Company of Chicago, Illinois, in 1907. The pavement is called Granitoid, and is a poured concrete material with inlaid stone chips; it is grooved in a rectangular material. Many of Knoxville's older neighborhood streets were paved with this material. In the intervening years, most of them have been repaved. Kenyon Street is one of the best examples remaining in the city.

The Old North Knoxville Historic District contains at least one house designed by the architect George F. Barber. Barber moved to Knoxville in 1888 and established an architectural office. He designed and marketed mail order house plans, as well as the houses themselves. He maintained the business until his death in 1917. His designs were sold national and internationally. Knoxville's rail links to other cities played a part in his establishing a Knoxville base, since they provided ready transportation for his houses.

George Barber published several catalogues advertising his house designs, which included both Victorian era designs and later, Neoclassical styles. If one of these publications interested a potential client, he could complete and questionnaire and send it with an appropriate fee to Barber's office. Plans, elevations, working drawings, a bill of materials and prefabricated parts of the houses themselves could be purchased in this way.

Barber's Victorian era designs can best be described as a mixture of Queen Anne and Eastlake. His later, Neoclassical work, featured Palladian windows, paired or tripled wood columns with Ionic or Doric capitals and dentil molding. The house attributed to him, Pinecrest (131 East Scott Avenue), was constructed in 1899. It combines elements like stained glass windows from the Queen Anne style, recessed porches with shingled balustrades from the Shingle style, and Neoclassical details such as Ionic and Doric column capitals to create an eclectic building that is Neoclassical in feeling. The house is marked by Queen Anne double hung windows with stained or leaded glass, an arcaded shingled balustrade and pilasters with Ionic capitals on the front porch, projecting bay windows with applied classical garland trim, and a sun room with round wood columns with Doric capitals. Its elaborate detailing and general form create a transition between the Queen Anne and Neoclassical styles.

George Barber's son, Charles I. Barber, was also an architect in Knoxville. He worked for six years in his father's office while in school in Knoxville, and then attended the University of Pennsylvania. He received a certificate in architecture in 1911. He returned to Knoxville in 1911 and worked with his father for a year, then formed the partnership of Barber and Sehorn. In 1915 the firm of Barber and McMurray was first created. The firm designed many notable Knoxville buildings, including the General Building at 625 Market Street (NR 3/8/88). The Barber and McMurray firm is still active in Knoxville, although Charles Barber died in 1962. He is especially well known for his sensitive designs from the revivals that marked the first half of the twentieth century. The house at 518 Glenwood Avenue, in the Old North Knoxville Historic District, is a good example of his work. French Eclectic in style, the house is marked by an attention to detail and a sensitive interpretation of the style.

Lou-Mar, at 505 East Scott Avenue, is the third house in Knoxville definitely attributable to a Knoxville architect. The house was designed by David Getaz, who also designed and managed the construction of the Knox County Courthouse (NR 4/24/73). He built Lou-Mar for his own residence. It is rumored that his desire to continue embellishing Lou-Mar, combined with difficult economic times, caused the bankruptcy of his company. David Getaz was a partner in Stephenson and Getaz, a contracting, building and architectural firm. Getaz was a Swiss immigrant to Knoxville.

In addition to the large houses and lots, the Old North Knoxville Historic District contains a substantial collection of smaller, working-class shotguns, bungalows and cottages. Located to the south and west end of the district, these houses differ in scale and detailing from their larger neighbors. They also reflect the economic growth that occurred in Knoxville at the beginning of the twentieth century, and the suburbanization that accompanied it. For the most part, they were occupied by the laborers in the industries and mercantile establishments made accessible by the development of the streetcar railway system.

The area continued to experience new development until the 1940's. By that time, many of the original neighborhood families had matured. Women were widowed, children moved away, and the large houses became a financial and physical burden. The young middle class continued to move west, north and east of the city, settling in west Knoxville, to the north in Fountain City, and east in Holston Hills. Construction of permanent bridges across the Tennessee River also created demands for residential construction in the southern area of Knoxville. Particularly during the two decades between 1950 and 1970, many of the larger houses were converted to multi-family housing, and much of the housing stock began to suffer from deferred maintenance and disinvestment. The 1970's saw a renewed interest in the neighborhood. The formation of the Old North Knoxville Neighborhood Association signaled a new wave of migration to the neighborhood. Many of the houses in Old North Knoxville have been rehabilitated and restored to single family use. The Old North Knoxville neighborhood has continued to strengthen its commitment to rehabilitation and reuse, and to combat deterioration.

The boundaries of Old North Knoxville Historic District represent an intact collection of architecture from this significant period in Knoxville history. The large and small houses reflect the economic growth and prosperity that Knoxville enjoyed from 1890 to 1940. Distinctive architecture that traces evolution of styles from the 1890s through the 1920s, the representation of upper, middle and working class buildings, the reflection of planning forms through the important streetcar engendered development, and the intact area within the boundaries all lend a recognition feature to the historic district and enhance its viability. The area is a significant architectural and historical resource.
