Summary Paragraph

The Demopolis Historic District now consists of an irregularly shaped area within the city of Demopolis that contains approximately 790 acres of land. The topography of the district is flat. The district is generally bounded by E. Gaines Street, N. Ash Street, W. Pettus Street, and S. Stewart Street. Streets are laid out in a rectilinear grid that is oriented along north-south and east-west directions. Street names include compass directions with Franklin Street dividing north and south and Walnut Street dividing east and west street designations. The expanded district encompasses the entire National Register-listed Demopolis Historic Business District. This original district consists of approximately 17 acres which is now surrounded by an additional 773 acres. The original district is centrally located within this expanded district and is urban and commercial in character with close spaces of adjoining buildings being typical. The remainder of the district is residential with scattered religious buildings. Streets are typically lined with sidewalks, and residential areas typically retain mature trees and lawns. Resources listed in the Demopolis Historic Business District are included in the inventory of this nomination with both their original and their updated inventory numbers.

Narrative Description

The district includes 494 resources, of which 68 were previously listed in the National Register. 405 (82%) of the resources are contributing and 89 are noncontributing (18%) Contributing resources date from the following periods: circa 1820-1860, 16; 1861-1865, 1; 1866-1899, 78; 1900-1940, 216; and 1941-1963, 95. The majority of the contributing resources (298, 73%) are single family residences with an additional eight multi-family residential resources. Other contributing resources include commercial buildings (74, 18%), twelve religious buildings, five recreational facilities, two industrial facilities (Resources #109 & #493), one civic center (Resource #148), one barn (Resource #152), one earthen work fortification (Resource #314), one school (Resource #284), one U.S. Post Office (Resource #47), one city hall (Resource #395), one water tower (Resource #149), one monument (Resource #223), and one ancillary building (Resource #143). The inventory for the Demopolis Historic Business District included 57 resources. Of those, one resource (the Town Square) represented five separate resources, two additional resources were indicated on the map but not numbered, and one resource was demolished.

Noncontributing resources include 62 (72%) that were constructed after the district's period of significance and 24 (28%) that were substantially altered after the district's period of significance.

Period of Significance (Justification)

The period of significance for the district extends from circa 1820, when its earliest contributing resources were constructed, to 1963, the National Register program's fifty-year cutoff.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Demopolis Historic District is significant at the local level under Criterion A in the area of community planning and development. Located in Marengo County, Demopolis has been an important commercial center for the western Black Belt agricultural region since its founding in 1819. The resources within the historic district illustrate the town's economic development, the diversity of its population, and its social, cultural, and religious life. The district's surviving historic resources illustrate much of its historical development and are architecturally locally significant under Criterion C as a representative collection of period building styles.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Community Planning and Development:

The Demopolis Historic District illustrates the development of Demopolis from the antebellum era through the mid-20th century. The town began as a market town for the surrounding agricultural areas. In the antebellum era, cotton cultivation dominated the local economy. Enslaved Africans and African-Americans, who labored on cotton plantations, made up the majority of the population in Marengo County. With access to Tombigbee River steamboats that connected the town to the port of Mobile on the Gulf of Mexico, Demopolis was an important cotton market and commercial center. Its thriving commerce drew many people seeking opportunity, including German and Jewish immigrants. Several resources in the Demopolis Historic District remain to illustrate this period of prosperity, including the public square, a church, the historic town hall, and dwellings of planters, merchants, and professionals.

The Civil War and Reconstruction disrupted the agricultural economy of the western Black Belt. Commercial activity and population growth in Demopolis slowed, but began to rebound beginning in the 1880s. Aided by improvements in railroads, river transportation, and roadways, Demopolis businessmen developed facilities for processing cotton and timber. These efforts reflected the New South ideology of the late 19th century, and ushered in a period of growth that continued through the 1920s. The commercial buildings in the downtown area, the park-like appearance of the public square, the town's churches, and the large number of dwellings constructed between 1880 and 1930, illustrate this period of growth and optimism about the future of Demopolis. Several resources within the Demopolis Historic District are associated with the businesses and churches that the city's African-Americans established during this period, which saw the imposition of racial segregation and the disfranchisement of blacks and poor whites. In addition, several buildings illustrate the growth of the town's Jewish community in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, and its decline in the mid-to-late 20th century.

Demopolis experienced economic hardship during the Great Depression of the 1930s, and commercial and residential construction slowed. After the end of World War II (1941-1945), the town's population grew, leading to the construction of new housing within older areas of the town as well as along its edges. The downtown area expanded only modestly, as commercial development began to shift away from downtown towards the highways on the city's outskirts.

Architecture

The contributing buildings in the Demopolis Historic District reflect the town's historical development from circa 1820 through the mid-20th century. Stylistically, buildings within the district are representative of major architectural styles and common folk forms typically constructed during the district's period of significance.

Houses reflecting major period architectural styles are generally clustered along Main Avenue, at the northwest portion of the district west of Main Avenue and north of Washington Street, and to the south of Washington Street between Commissioners and Strawberry Avenues. Commercial buildings within the central business area of the city, generally centered along Washington Street and the immediate blocks bordering it to the north and south between Main and Cedar Avenues, include a mix of high style and vernacular buildings. Most of these buildings were previously listed in the National Register as part of the Demopolis Historic Business District. Residences of more modest design are typically located in areas to the east of Main Avenue, north of E. Franklin Street, and east of S. Strawberry Avenue south of Jefferson Street.

Of the resources that retained identifiable architectural styles, two were classified as Beaux Arts, including the Demopolis Public School (Resource #284, circa 1900, Photos #49-50) and the Elks Theatre/Si-Non Theatre (Resource #451, circa 1915.); one as a Swiss Chalet, the Prout House (Resource #180, circa 1910, Photo #6); fifteen as Colonial Revival, notable examples including the U.S. Post Office (Resources #47, 1924, Photo #12) and the First Baptist Church (Resource #370, circa 1959), fifteen as Craftsman (Resource #380 being a representative example, Photo #38), although many simpler folk houses exhibit Craftsman details; six as Greek Revival with notable examples including Bluff Hall (Resource #145, 1832, Photo #16) and the Lyon-Lamar House (Resource #254, circa 1840, Photo #44); two as Italianate including the Michaels/George House (Resource #381, 1883, Photo #39) and Laird Cottage (Resource #404, circa 1860, Photo #22); four as Mission Revival (Resources #188 - Photo #42, 189, 306-Photo #51, and 418); ten as Queen Anne with notable examples including Resources #50 (Photo #13) and the H.B. & Settie Meyer Pake House (Resource #267, Photos #45-46), although many simpler folk houses exhibit Queen Anne details; one Romanesque Revival (First Presbyterian Church, Resource #361, ca. 1905, Photo #26), nine as Tudor Revival (examples including resources #54 and #298); and four as Victorian Gothic, including three churches (Resources #229, #266, and #377- Photo #36) and Ashe Cottage (Resource #139, ca. 1850, Photo #15). According to its date stone, the U.S. Post Office (Resources #47, 1924, Photo #12) was designed by James Knox Taylor. Taylor served as Supervising Architect of the United States Department of the Treasury from 1897 to 1912.

The residential folk patterns represented include gable front, gable front and wing rectangular plan, massed plan, pyramidal, and H, I, L, and T plans. Many of the late-nineteenth and early twentieth century residences represent folk adaptations of simple Victorian patterns with common decorative details including decorative wood shingles and/or window and vent combinations in gable ends, simple and limited sawn decorative trim, and turned or chamfered porch posts occasionally with simple gingerbread trim.

The majority of the district's contributing buildings (53%) date from circa 1900 through 1941. Twenty-four percent date from 1942 to 1963, nineteen percent date from 1865 to 1899, and four percent date prior to 1865.

A municipal complex is centrally located within the commercial core within a town square and includes City Hall (Resource #395, circa 1820), Demopolis Presbyterian Church (also known as Rooster Hall, Resource #396, 1843, Photo #5), a bandstand (Resource #397, circa 1890), and a fountain (Resource #398, circa 1900)

Contributing buildings within the district date from circa 1820 through circa 1963. The majority of the noncontributing residences are simple minimal traditional or ranch style houses dating from the late 1960s through the present, as well as, a number of manufactured homes. The remaining noncontributing resources include a number of commercial and industrial buildings.

Developmental History/Additional Historic Context Information

Settlement and Growth, 1816-1860

Demopolis is situated in northwest Marengo County in western Alabama, near the confluence of the Tombigbee River, which borders the town on the west, and the Black Warrior River to the east. It is situated in the western part of the fertile Black Belt region of Alabama. By the mid-18th century, French traders had traveled up the Tombigbee to this area to trade with the Choctaws, who occupied the land east of the Tombigbee River. In 1816, the United States acquired the land from the Choctaws. In 1817, the town of Demopolis was established by a group of French settlers who abandoned the town site a year later after learning that it lay just outside the boundaries of their land grant.ⁱ

In 1819, the Demopolis Town Company, which was composed primarily of U.S. citizens, purchased the abandoned French town site. The original town plan consisted of gridded streets and included a public square. In the summer of 1819, the town commissioners erected a two-story building on the public square that served as a tavern and city hall.ⁱⁱ

Incorporated in December 1821, Demopolis developed a commercial economy centered on the cotton trade and steamboat traffic along the Tombigbee River. Given the poor condition of roads in antebellum Alabama, steamboats were the fastest way for people to travel and ship goods between Demopolis and Mobile, Alabama, a major port on the Gulf of Mexico. Area planters brought their cotton crop to Demopolis to be carried by steamboat to export markets in Mobile. Tombigbee River steamboats played a role in the slave trade as well, transporting enslaved African-Americans between cotton plantations and slave markets located in Mobile and other U.S. cities.ⁱⁱⁱ

A frontier town in the 1820s, Demopolis grew into a settled community by the mid-1830s. Between 1834 and 1840, residents formed Episcopalian (1834), Presbyterian (1839), and Methodist (1840) congregations. The Demopolis Presbyterian Church, constructed in 1843 on the town's public square, is the only surviving church building in Demopolis from the period before the Civil War.^{iv} In 1838, inventor Fones McCarthy settled in Demopolis and established the Demopolis Manufacturing Company, which produced the cotton gin that he invented.^v By 1860, the town had "seven dry goods, two drug and several grocery and confectionary stores; two hotels; two livery stables; [cotton] gin, mill, carriage, wagon, harness, saddle, shoe, boot, tin and jewelry establishments, numerous smith and wood shops, and one Printing establishment."^{vi}

By 1860, Demopolis had grown into a community of approximately 1,200 people.^{vii} The cotton markets and steamboat traffic in Demopolis attracted planters from the surrounding agricultural areas as well as aspiring merchants, artisans, and laborers. Many of the white residents came from older states to the east and north, particularly Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. Some came from prominent families, were well-educated, and had sufficient economic resources to purchase land or establish themselves as merchants. Demopolis also attracted a substantial number of immigrants from German-speaking parts of Europe; most were artisans or merchants. Isaac Marx, a German immigrant who arrived in Demopolis in the 1840s, was one of the town's first Jewish residents. He became a successful merchant who operated a general store at the corner of Main and Capitol Streets. Other Jews, including members of Marx's extended family, joined him in Demopolis in the 1850s and 1860s. In 1858, they formed the B'nai Jeshurun congregation.^{viii}

The population of antebellum Demopolis included enslaved African-Americans who lived and worked in the town's dwellings and businesses. In the 1830s and 1840s, the slave population in Marengo County increased rapidly as white planters transported and purchased slaves to work on the county's cotton plantations.^{ix} Although most of the slaves in Marengo County worked in the cotton fields, some lived and worked in the houses, artisan shops, stores, and hotels of Demopolis. According to local oral tradition, many of the town's bricklayers and brick makers were African-American.^x

Among the African-American population in antebellum Demopolis was a small number of free blacks. According to federal census records, twelve free blacks lived in Marengo County in 1840, and thirty-seven in 1850. Although census records do not include information on the free black population in Demopolis, it is likely that many of the county's free blacks lived in the town.^{xi} Local historian Winston Smith identified several free African-Americans in antebellum Demopolis. In 1843, the town marshal threatened to evict a man named Scott for "unlawful acts and keeping a disorderly house"; merchant Gottlieb Breitling intervened in the case and Scott and his family were allowed to remain in Demopolis. Peter Lee was a skilled carpenter who was a slave who purchased his freedom by 1850, likely using wages he earned from being hired out.

Casey Long was a free black carpenter as well, and worked on the construction, renovation, and expansion of Gaineswood, Nathan Bryan Whitfield's plantation on the edge of town.^{xii}

A few antebellum dwellings remain within the historic district to illustrate the prosperity of antebellum Demopolis. While virtually all of the antebellum commercial buildings and modest dwellings have been demolished, several examples of planter-class and middle-class dwellings remain. For example, Bluff Hall (405 N. Commissioners Avenue) was built in 1832 for Francis Strother Lyon, a lawyer and planter who served in the United States and Confederate Congresses and in the Alabama State Senate. Dr. Cincinnatus Ashe, a physician, built a Gothic Revival-style house on Strawberry Street; the house was moved to its present location on South Commissioners Avenue. Other examples include the Curtis House (510 N. Main Street), the Lyon-Lamar House (102 S. Main Street), the house at 101 S. Main Street, and the Cornish House (201 S. Strawberry Street).

Civil War, 1861-1865

In early 1861, when news reached Demopolis that Alabama had joined other southern states in seceding from the United States, white residents organized a parade to celebrate the occasion. Most voters in Marengo County supported secession in order to protect the right to own slaves. Some white residents – including Gaius Whitfield, the wealthiest man in the county – opposed leaving the Union, but nevertheless backed the Confederacy after the war began. By the end of the war, more than 1,000 men from Marengo County had enlisted in the Confederate Army.^{xiii}

Demopolis became a key supply center for the Confederate Army during the war largely because of its location along the Alabama and Mississippi Rivers Railroad. Organized in 1850, the railroad linked Selma and Uniontown, Alabama by 1858. Construction of the rail line to Demopolis began in 1860, and was in progress when the Civil War began in 1861. In the spring of 1862, after the destruction of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad in Tennessee, the Alabama and Mississippi Rivers Railroad became an important east-west rail line through the Confederate States. Together with other railroads, it linked Selma, Alabama – where the Confederacy maintained a large arsenal and foundry – with Meridian, Mississippi. As a result, the Confederate government pushed for the railroad to be completed as quickly as possible. To help speed construction, the Confederate government loaned the railroad company $150,000 interest-free.^{xiv}

Demopolis engineer A.S. Gaines supervised the construction of the railroad, which was built by slaves from local plantations. On November 1, 1862, the railroad was completed to Demopolis, with the tracks entering on the north side of town and terminating at the upper steamboat landing at the intersection of Childress Street and Commissioners Avenue. Upon reaching the upper landing, freight and passengers transferred to steamboats that carried them to the tracks opposite McDowell's landing, approximately four miles away. By early 1864, the tracks through Demopolis had been re-routed along Franklin Street to Desonette Street, where they turned southwest towards McDowell's landing.^{xv}

During the war, the Confederate government maintained several facilities in Demopolis, including a commissary, quartermaster's offices and warehouses, an ordnance depot, a hospital, and the medical purveyor's office, where medical supplies were organized and distributed. In addition, a large military camp on the outskirts of town housed from several hundred to several thousand paroled prisoners of war, including Confederate soldiers who had been captured by Union troops when Vicksburg fell in 1863. Confederate President Jefferson Davis visited the camp in October 1863.^{xvi} After the fall of Vicksburg, the Confederate forces constructed fortifications in preparation for the possibility of attack by Union troops; portions of these fortifications are still visible on West Pettus Street. However, the Union attack never came. From February to May 1864, Confederate General Leonidas K. Polk had his headquarters in Demopolis, and increased troops in anticipation of an attack by Union General William T. Sherman. However, Sherman bypassed Demopolis, as did Union General James H. Wilson in 1865.^{xvii}

After the Civil War ended in 1865, slaves in Demopolis, and throughout the former Confederacy, gained their freedom. Immediately following emancipation, freed people had little or no property, and their legal status and rights as freed people were undefined, making them vulnerable to unchecked violence and exploitation. In 1865, the federal government established the Freedmen's Bureau, which oversaw labor contracts, provided legal assistance to freed people, and supplied them with food, clothing, education, and health care. The office of the Bureau's district superintendent for Marengo County and surrounding counties was located in Demopolis, where the Freedmen's Bureau operated a hospital and two schools.^{xviii}

After emancipation, African-Americans claimed their religious independence by establishing their own churches. In 1868, a Baptist congregation that had formed on Gaineswood plantation during slavery founded Morning Star Baptist; Methodists formed African Methodist Episcopal (A.M.E.) Zion Church the following year.^{xix} During Radical Reconstruction (1865-1877), African-Americans in Alabama also enjoyed a brief period of political power in the Republican Party and won election to state and local offices. Two African-Americans from Demopolis served in the state legislature during this period: Methodist minister Edward R. Rose in 1868, and Franklin Henry Threat in 1874. James Caldwell was a member of the Demopolis Town Council in 1869 and on the Marengo County Commission in 1869-1870.^{xx} However, this era of political power was short-lived. In 1874, the conservative, white Democratic Party won over white Republicans and secured control of state politics.^{xxi}

In the decades following the end of the Civil War, Jews from Europe and from other cities in Alabama settled in Demopolis, joining the small Jewish community that developed before the war. One of the most successful of the post-bellum Jewish immigrants was Morris Mayer, a German businessman who came to Demopolis in 1866. Circa 1870, he established a general store on Walnut Street. His brother Ludwig Mayer joined him in the business, which grew to become one of the largest retail establishments in Demopolis.^{xxii}

After the war ended, the Alabama and Mississippi Rivers Railroad began civilian operations, and a bridge over the Tombigbee River was constructed. With railroad and river routes reopened, Demopolis resumed its status as a shipping point and processing center for the cotton trade. Cotton production in the Black Belt remained below pre-war levels through much of the 1870s, but the presence of the railroad set the stage for Demopolis's continued importance as a market for Black Belt farmers.^{xxiii}

A fire, a financial panic, and a flood in the 1870s slowed economic recovery in Demopolis. In 1872, a fire swept through downtown Demopolis, destroying stores along Washington and Strawberry Streets. The fire, combined with a nationwide financial panic in 1873, led to the failure of several businesses. In 1874, high waters on the Tombigbee River flooded portions of the town, destroying more buildings.^{xxiv}

New South, 1880-1929

Between 1880 and 1929, Demopolis experienced a period of growth that is reflected in its architecture; a substantial number of the historic buildings that remain within the Demopolis Historic District date to this period. The growth of Demopolis during this period illustrates the effort by civic and business leaders throughout the South to bring prosperity back to the region and create a "New South." They urged communities to reduce their historic reliance on agriculture and to develop new industries, transportation routes, and financial institutions. Although Demopolis continued to rely heavily on agriculture, it attracted some industry and improved its transportation networks.^{xxv} Yet, even as it brought economic growth, the "New South" era also brought disfranchisement of African-Americans and poor whites, and the imposition of racial segregation.

In an 1887 pamphlet, the Demopolis City Council boasted that the city was "the commercial centre of as magnificent [an] agricultural region as can be found in the South." Cotton remained the dominant crop; each year, local farmers brought 15,000 to 20,000 bales of cotton to the town, where it was "shipped direct from this point to eastern spinners and for foreign export."^{xxvi} Cotton processing and shipping facilities were typically located on the edges of town or just outside the town limits. For example, by 1890, John C. Webb owned a cotton warehouse, gin, and compress at the west end of Franklin Street, adjacent to both a steamboat wharf and the rail line. A cottonseed oil factory was located in this area as well.^{xxvii}

Thanks to improvements in river navigation and the construction of a new railroad and roadways, Demopolis remained a transportation hub for the western Black Belt. By 1915, a series of locks and dams on the Tombigbee and Black Warrior Rivers improved navigation.^{xxviii} In the 1920s, the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway laid tracks just east of Demopolis, connecting the town with Kansas City and Memphis to the northwest and the port of Pensacola, Florida to the south.^{xxix} Increases in the number of automobiles in the first three decades of the 20th century spurred the development of improved roadways. In 1919, the Dixie Overland Highway (U.S. Highway 80) was constructed just south of Demopolis, placing the town along a major long-distance route for automobile traffic. The construction of the highway's bridge over the Tombigbee River gained national attention as a result of a unique fundraising effort – a rooster auction. Held in the Demopolis public square, the auction featured roosters donated by Helen Keller, President Woodrow Wilson, the leaders of Great Britain, France, Italy, and others.^{xxx}

In addition to helping Demopolis retain its position as a regional agricultural center, transportation improvements helped the town attract industry. Most of the industries in Demopolis were small operations that processed timber, cotton, and dairy products from the surrounding farm land. Between 1900 and 1929, several lumber mills, a planing mill, a spoke and handle factory, a stave factory, a textile mill, and a creamery were located within three miles of the town. Circa 1900, a cement factory was constructed east of town, on the Black Warrior River, taking advantage of readily available lime deposits in the area.^{xxxi} These industries helped maintain economic stability in Demopolis in the early 20th century, just as local cotton farmers were facing falling prices and the destruction by the boll weevil, an insect that feeds on cotton plants.

Civic improvements in the late 19th and early 20th centuries both reflected the prosperity of Demopolis and represented a way to attract more commercial and industrial investment to the town. Efforts to improve the town's appearance were particularly evident in the public square. Sidewalks, trees, a fountain, and a gazebo/bandstand gave the square a more park-like appearance.^{xxxii} Other efforts at beautification included the installation of sidewalks and trees along town streets, and the construction of grassy medians on Main Street.^{xxxiii} The town government also renovated and expanded municipal buildings on the square, and installed a water works, electric light plant, and a sewer system.^{xxxiv} In 1897, Demopolis took charge of its own school district, which was segregated by race. In 1913, the town government built a new public school for white students, but did not erect a brick school for African-American students until 1920.^{xxxv}

The inequality in educational facilities for whites and African-Americans in Demopolis was emblematic of the discrimination blacks faced in the "New South." By the 1880s, state and local governments in Alabama and throughout the former Confederacy enacted laws that required racial segregation. The Alabama constitution of 1901 disfranchised African-Americans, closing most political and legal avenues to challenging the imposition of racial segregation or fighting discrimination in employment or public education. However, through fraternal organizations and churches, African-Americans organized to support schools and to provide social services. They established businesses as well; these were concentrated along Strawberry Street between Franklin Avenue and Washington Avenue, and in the eastern part of town. Most of these establishments were patronized primarily or exclusively by African-Americans, but local residents recall that some of the black-owned cafes and bars in east Demopolis in the early 20th century served both whites and blacks. Several African-Americans became successful carpenters, including John Wesley Banks, Sol Truesdale, Conner Young, and Robert Jones, Sr.^{xxxvi}

Throughout the late 19th and early 20th centuries, the town's Jewish citizens made up a notable portion of the town's business owners. In his reminiscences about the city's Jewish community, Jacob Koch recalled that there were about twenty-five Jewish-owned businesses in Demopolis circa 1920. One of them was Julius Rosenbush, who immigrated to the United States in 1880 and came to Demopolis in 1894. He established a furniture business that remained in operation for over 100 years. As prosperous merchants and bankers, several members of the Jewish community in Demopolis held influential positions in the city, serving as mayors, town councilmen and directors of the local bank.^{xxxvii}

The expansion of downtown Demopolis and the construction of new housing between 1880 and 1930 illustrate the town's success as a small but growing "New South" town. Between 1884 and 1930, the commercial district spread east and west along Washington Avenue, as well as north and south along Walnut Street. New businesses included the Demopolis Inn (1892), the Braswell Theatre (1902), the Elks Theater (1915) as well as automobile dealerships and service stations.^{xxxviii} Large, high-style residences illustrate the success of business owners, professionals, and planters, while the more modest dwellings reflect growth in the town's economy and population. African-American neighborhoods developed primarily in south and east Demopolis, in areas annexed by the town in the late 19th or early 20th centuries.^{xxxix}

The 1890s inaugurated what one minister dubbed “a New Church era in Demopolis.”^{xxl} Between 1890 and 1905, the white Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Catholic congregations constructed new churches or improved their existing buildings. In the early 1890s, members of the growing Jewish community built Temple B'nai Jeshurun at the corner of Main and Monroe.^{xli} Between 1900 and 1920, the African-American congregations at AME Zion and Morning Star Baptist replaced their church buildings.^{xlii} These new and improved houses of worship reflect the prosperity of Demopolis during this period as well as its racial and religious diversity.

The Great Depression and Post-War Prosperity, 1930-1962

In the 1930s, Demopolis suffered the economic effects of the Great Depression. Following the stock market crash of 1929, the United States economy declined rapidly, resulting in high unemployment and poverty throughout the 1930s. Manufacturing and agricultural production in Marengo County plummeted. The annual value of manufactures in Marengo County declined from $3,064 in 1930 to $1,073 in 1940, and the value of dairy products fell by 45%. The decline in agricultural production was even more dramatic. In 1939, the total value of crops harvested in the county was approximately 35% of what it was in 1929. The value of Marengo County cotton fell from $3,526,405 in 1929 to $487,431 in 1939.^{xliii} With farmers struggling and manufacturing facilities closing, fewer people came to Demopolis to buy and sell goods, and those that did come to the town had little money to spend. As a result, businesses closed and construction slowed.^{xliv}

Although construction in Demopolis slowed as a result of the economic hardships of the 1930s, it did not come to a halt. The Marengo Theater, for instance, opened in 1935. Members of the Webb family, which owned cotton shipping and processing facilities and a lumber yard, built large, Colonial Revival-style houses on West Capitol Street and on North Commissioners Avenue in the 1930s. Construction of smaller houses continued as well.

During World War II (1941-1945), residents of Demopolis organized a civilian defense group to support the war effort. Mayor N.C. Floyd led the group, which organized salvage drives, taught first-aid classes, and distributed posters.^{xlv} Merchants struggled to get merchandise in the midst of wartime shortages.^{xlvi} After the war, cotton prices and production, which had begun to decline in the 1930s, fell even further. A 1953 article in the Tuscaloosa News declared that “cotton is no longer king” in Demopolis. The beef cattle, dairy, and timber industries were prospering, and “Demopolis is fast becoming one of the leading industrial centers in West Alabama.” In the 1950s, a paper mill, a chemical plant, and a textile mill were established, and the cement factory east of town continued to operate. In addition, the town remained a business and commercial center for local farmers as well as being the home of Bryan W. Whitfield Memorial Hospital, which opened in 1953.^{xlvii}

With the proliferation of the automobile, much of the post-World War II commercial and industrial construction took place beyond the city’s outskirts, particularly along highways such as U.S. Route 80 (the Dixie Overland Highway). The downtown area expanded only modestly, with the construction of a few commercial buildings along its northern, southern, and eastern edges. Among the new buildings were several automobile-related businesses, such as dealerships, service stations, and gas stations.^{xlviii}

Demopolis gained more than three-thousand residents between 1940 and 1960, nearly doubling its population. Some of these new residents likely moved to Demopolis from nearby rural areas, reflecting a statewide decline in the rural population.^{xlix} The number of Jews living in the city declined during this period, mostly as a result of the children of Jewish residents moving out of the area. In the 1950s, in response to a dwindling congregation, the local synagogue demolished the 1890 temple and replaced it with a smaller building.ⁱ

In the 1960s, African-Americans in Demopolis worked to abolish racial segregation, to secure their civil rights, and receive equal treatment by employers and businesses. In the spring of 1965, civil rights protests by school children garnered national attention.ⁱⁱ In the 1970s, the city fully integrated its public schools.ⁱⁱⁱ

The Jewish population in Demopolis continued to decline in the late 20th century. By the early 1980s, thirteen Jews lived in Demopolis. In 1999, Bert Rosenbush, Jr., grandson of furniture store owner Julius Rosenbush, was the only Jew residing in the town.ⁱⁱⁱⁱ

The population and economy of Demopolis continued to grow in the late 20th century, despite the closure of several of the factories in the city. In the early 21st century, retail development along the highways at the edge of town increased, while many downtown commercial buildings shifted from retail use to offices.^{lv}

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The boundaries of the Demopolis Historic District are indicated on an accompanying scaled map. The map was based on information obtained from U.S.G.S. topographic maps, the county tax assessor, and U.S.G.S. satellite images.

Demopolis Historic District
Name of Property

Marengo, AL
County and State

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundary includes the central portions of the city of Demopolis that retain sufficient integrity to convey a sense of the historic time and place of the district.

RE: 100 Capitol Street West

Dear Mr. Wordekemper:

Because you are an owner whose property/properties are within the boundaries of the Downtown Demopolis Historic District in Demopolis (Marengo County), Alabama, I am pleased to inform you that this district is to be considered by the Alabama National Register Review Board for nomination to the National Register of Historic Places on September 27, 2012. The National Register is the official national list of historic properties worthy of preservation. Listing in the National Register provides recognition and assists in preserving our nation's heritage. Enclosed is a fact sheet on the National Register of Historic Places as well as a map of the Downtown Demopolis Historic District.

Owners of private properties nominated to the National Register have an opportunity to concur in or object to listing in accord with the National Historic Preservation Act and 36 CFR 60. Any owner or partial owner of private property who chooses to object to listing may submit to the State Historic Preservation Officer a notarized statement certifying that the party is the sole or partial owner of the private property and objects to the listing. Each owner or partial owner of private property has one vote regardless of what part of the property that party owns. If a majority of private property owners object, a property will not be listed; however, the State Historic Preservation Officer shall submit the nomination to the Keeper of the National Register for determination of eligibility for listing in the National Register. If the property is then determined eligible for listing, although not formally listed, the only result is that federal agencies will be required to allow the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation an opportunity to comment before the agency may fund, license, or assist a project which will affect the property. If an owner chooses to object to the listing of the property, the notarized objection must be submitted to the Alabama Historical Commission by September 27, 2012. Please send your comments on whether the property should be nominated to the National Register to our National Register Coordinator, Susan Enzweiler, at the above address.

Demopolis Historic District
National Register Nomination

The Demopolis Historic District falls within the jurisdiction of the city of Demopolis, one of the certified local governments within the state of Alabama. Certified local governments have certain National Register notification responsibilities. Within 30 days of notification, the local historic preservation commission and the chief local elected official should transmit to the Alabama Historical Commission their opinion as to whether or not the property meets the criteria for listing in the National Register. This opinion shall constitute formal comment by the certified local government and may be as simple as an affirmative statement that, in their opinion, the property meets the criteria for listing in the National Register. However, if in their opinion the property does not meet the criteria, reasons for that opinion should be stated.

During the 30-day period, the certified local government must provide a reasonable opportunity for public comment. The measure to be taken by each certified local government would be determined by mutual agreement between the local government and the Alabama Historical Commission. In the event that both the local commission and the chief local elected official separately determine that the property meets the criteria for listing to the National Register and recommend the property to be considered for nomination, the nomination process continues. If the local commission or the chief local elected official determines that the property does not meet the criteria for listing in the National Register, the nomination process continues. If both the local commission and the chief local elected official determine that the property does not meet the criteria for listing in the National Register and recommend the property not be nominated, the Alabama Historical Commission shall take no further action on the proposed nomination. However, if a third party files a written appeal with the Alabama Historical Commission, the nomination process must continue.

If you have any questions regarding this matter, please contact me at 334/230-2667.

Very truly yours,

Elizabeth Ann Brown

Re: 309 N. Walnut Street, Demopolis, Alabama

To whom it may concern:

I, Charles Errol Price am the sole owner of the above listed property. I object to the inclusion of this house/property in the Demopolis Historic District. While this house was constructed in the early 20th century, I do not believe that the architecture merits the inclusion. It has served as a rental for a number of years, and much of the interior construction has been changed through the years. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Summary Paragraph

The Demopolis Historic District consists of an irregularly shaped area within the city of Demopolis that contains approximately 790 acres of land. The topography of the district is flat. The district is generally bounded by E. Gaines Street, N. Ash Street, W. Pettus Street, and S. Stewart Street. Streets are laid out in a rectilinear grid that is oriented along north-south and east-west directions. Street names include compass directions with Franklin Street dividing north and south and Walnut Street dividing east and west street designations. The district encompasses the entire National Register-listed Demopolis Historic Business District. That district is centrally located within this district and is urban and commercial in character with close spaces of adjoining buildings being typical. Resources listed in the Demopolis Historic Business District are included in the inventory with this nomination. The remainder of the district is residential with scattered religious buildings. Streets are typically lined with sidewalks, and residential areas typically retain mature trees and lawns.

Narrative Description

The district includes 494 resources, of which 68 were previously listed in the National Register. 405 (82%) of the resources are contributing and 89 are noncontributing (18%). Contributing resources date from the following periods: circa 1820-1860, 16; 1861-1865, 1; 1866-1899, 78; 1900-1940, 216; and 1941-1963, 95. The majority of the contributing resources (298, 73%) are single family residences with an additional eight multi-family residential resources. Other contributing resources include commercial buildings (74, 18%), twelve religious buildings, five recreational facilities, two industrial facilities (Resources #109 & #493), one civic center (Resource #148), one barn (Resource #152), one earthen work fortification (Resource #314), one school (Resource #284), one U.S. Post Office (Resource #47), one city hall (Resource #395), one water tower (Resource #149), one monument (Resource #223), and one ancillary building (Resource #143).

Noncontributing resources include 62 (72%) that were constructed after the district's period of significance and 24 (28%) that were substantially altered after the district's period of significance.

Period of Significance (Justification)

The period of significance for the district extends from circa 1820, when its earliest contributing resources were constructed, to 1963, the National Register program's fifty-year cutoff.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The Demopolis Historic District is significant at the local level under Criterion A in the area of community planning and development. Located in Marengo County, Demopolis has been an important commercial center for the western Black Belt agricultural region since its founding in 1819. The resources within the historic district illustrate the town's economic development, the diversity of its population, and its social, cultural, and religious life. The district's surviving historic resources illustrate much of its historical development and are architecturally locally significant under Criterion C as a representative collection of period building styles.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Community Planning and Development:

The Demopolis Historic District illustrates the development of Demopolis from the antebellum era through the mid-20th century. The town began as a market town for the surrounding agricultural areas. In the antebellum era, cotton cultivation dominated the local economy. Enslaved Africans and African-Americans, who labored on cotton plantations, made up the majority of the population in Marengo County. With access to Tombigbee River steamboats that connected the town to the port of Mobile on the Gulf of Mexico, Demopolis was an important cotton market and commercial center. Its thriving commerce drew many people seeking opportunity, including German and Jewish immigrants. Several resources in the Demopolis Historic District remain to illustrate this period of prosperity, including the public square, a church, the historic town hall, and dwellings of planters, merchants, and professionals.

The Civil War and Reconstruction disrupted the agricultural economy of the western Black Belt. Commercial activity and population growth in Demopolis slowed, but began to rebound beginning in the 1880s. Aided by improvements in railroads, river transportation, and roadways, Demopolis businessmen developed facilities for processing cotton and timber. These efforts reflected the New South ideology of the late 19th century, and ushered in a period of growth that continued through the 1920s. The commercial buildings in the downtown area, the park-like appearance of the public square, the town's churches, and the large number of dwellings constructed between 1880 and 1930, illustrate this period of growth and optimism about the future of Demopolis. Several resources within the Demopolis Historic District are associated with the businesses and churches that the city's African-Americans established during this period, which saw the imposition of racial segregation and the disfranchisement of blacks and poor whites. In addition, several buildings illustrate the growth of the town's Jewish community in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, and its decline in the mid to late 20th century.

Demopolis experienced economic hardship during the Great Depression of the 1930s, and commercial and residential construction slowed. After the end of World War II (1941-1945), the town's population grew, leading to the construction of new housing within older areas of the town, as well as, along its edges. The downtown area expanded only modestly, as commercial development began to shift away from downtown towards the highways on the city's outskirts.

Architecture

The contributing buildings in the Demopolis Historic District reflect the town's historical development from circa 1820 through the mid-20th century. Stylistically, buildings within the district are representative of major architectural styles and common folk forms typically constructed during the district's period of significance.

Houses reflecting major period architectural styles are generally clustered along Main Avenue, at the northwest portion of the district west of Main Avenue and north of Washington Street, and to the south of Washington Street between Commissioners and Strawberry Avenues. Commercial buildings within the central business area of the city, generally centered along Washington Street and the immediate blocks bordering it to the north and south between Main and Cedar Avenues, include a mix of high style and vernacular buildings. Most of these buildings were previously listed in the National Register as part of the Demopolis Historic Business District. Residences of more modest design are typically located in areas to the east of Main Avenue, north of E. Franklin Street, and east of S. Strawberry Avenue south of Jefferson Street.

Of the resources that retained identifiable architectural styles, two were classified as Beaux Arts, including the Demopolis Public School (Resource #284, circa 1900, Photos #49-50) and the Elks Theatre/Si-Non Theatre (Resource #451, circa 1915, Photo #6); one as a Swiss Chalet, the Prout House (Resource #180, circa 1910); fifteen as Colonial Revival, notable examples including the U.S. Post Office (Resources #47, 1924, Photo #12) and the First Baptist Church (Resource #370, circa 1959), fifteen as Craftsman (Resource #380 being a representative example, Photo #38), although many simpler folk houses exhibit Craftsman details; six as Greek Revival with notable examples including Bluff Hall (Resource #145, 1832, Photo #16) and the Lyon-Lamar House (Resource #254, circa 1840, Photo #44); two as Italianate including the Michaels/George House (Resource #381, 1883, Photo #39) and Laird Cottage (Resource #404, circa 1860, Photo #22); four as Mission Revival (Resources #188 -Photo #43, 189, 306-Photo #51, and 418); ten as Queen Anne with notable examples including Resources #50 (Photo #13) and the H.B. & Settie Meyer Pake House (Resource #267, Photos #45-46), although many simpler folk houses exhibit Queen Anne details; one Romanesque Revival (First Presbyterian Church, Resource #361, ca. 1905, Photo #26), nine as Tudor Revival (examples including resources #54 and #298); and four as Victorian Gothic, including three churches (Resources #229, #266, and #377- Photo #36) and Ashe Cottage (Resource #139, ca. 1850, Photo #15).

The residential folk patterns represented include gable front, gable front and wing rectangular plan, massed plan, pyramidal, and H, I, L, and T plans. Many of the late-nineteenth and early twentieth century residences represent folk adaptations of simple Victorian patterns with common decorative details including decorative wood shingles and/or window and vent combinations in gable ends, simple and limited sawn decorative trim, and turned or chamfered porch posts occasionally with simple gingerbread trim.

The majority of the district's contributing buildings (53%) date from circa 1900 through 1941. Twenty-four percent date from 1942 to 1963, nineteen percent date from 1865 to 1899, and four percent dating prior to 1865.

Most of the district's commercial buildings are constructed of brick and are one or two stories in height. Representative buildings include the McGrath Building (Resource #346, ca. 1896, Photo #7), Southern/Merchant Grocery Co. (also know as the Rosenbush Furniture Company, Resource #388, circa 1900, Photo #4), the Mayer Brothers Building (Resource #401, circa 1900, Photo #1, Left), and the McClelland Block (Resource #488, circa 1895).

A municipal complex is centrally located within the commercial core in a town square and includes City Hall (Resource #395, circa 1820), Demopolis Presbyterian Church (also known as Rooster Hall, Resource #396, 1843, Photo #5), a bandstand (Resource #397, circa 1890), and a fountain (Resource #398, circa 1900)

Contributing buildings within the district date from circa 1820 through circa 1963. The majority of the noncontributing residences are simple, minimal traditional or ranch style houses dating from the late 1960s through the present, as well as, a number of manufactured homes. The remaining noncontributing resources include a number of commercial and industrial buildings.

Developmental History/Additional Historic Context Information

Settlement and Growth, 1816-1860

Demopolis is situated in northwest Marengo County in western Alabama, near the confluence of the Tombigbee River, which borders the town on the west, and the Black Warrior River to the east. It is situated in the western part of the fertile Black Belt region of Alabama. By the mid-18th century, French traders had traveled up the Tombigbee to this area to trade with the Choctaws, who occupied the land east of the Tombigbee River. In 1816, the United States acquired the land from the Choctaws. In 1817, the town of Demopolis was established by a group of French settlers who abandoned the town site a year later after learning that it lay just outside the boundaries of their land grant.ⁱ

In 1819, the Demopolis Town Company, which was composed primarily of U.S. citizens, purchased the abandoned French town site. The original town plan consisted of gridded streets and included a public square. In the summer of 1819, the town commissioners erected a two-story building on the public square that served as a tavern and city hall.ⁱⁱ

Incorporated in December 1821, Demopolis developed a commercial economy centered on the cotton trade and steamboat traffic along the Tombigbee River. Given the poor condition of roads in antebellum Alabama, steamboats were the fastest way for people to travel and ship goods between Demopolis and Mobile, Alabama, a major port on the Gulf of Mexico. Area planters brought their cotton crop to Demopolis to be carried by steamboat to export markets in Mobile. Tombigbee River steamboats played a role in the slave trade as well, transporting enslaved

African-Americans between cotton plantations and slave markets located in Mobile and other U.S. cities.ⁱⁱⁱ

A frontier town in the 1820s, Demopolis grew into a settled community by the mid-1830s. Between 1834 and 1840, residents formed Episcopalian (1834), Presbyterian (1839), and Methodist (1840) congregations. The Demopolis Presbyterian Church, constructed in 1843 on the town's public square, is the only surviving church building in Demopolis from the period before the Civil War.^{iv} In 1838, inventor Fones McCarthy settled in Demopolis and established the Demopolis Manufacturing Company, which produced the cotton gin that he invented.^v By 1860, the town had "seven dry goods, two drug and several grocery and confectionary stores; two hotels; two livery stables; [cotton] gin, mill, carriage, wagon, harness, saddle, shoe, boot, tin and jewelry establishments, numerous smith and wood shops, and one Printing establishment."^{vi}

By 1860, Demopolis had grown into a community of approximately 1,200 people.^{vii} The cotton markets and steamboat traffic in Demopolis attracted planters from the surrounding agricultural areas as well as aspiring merchants, artisans, and laborers. Many of the white residents came from older states to the east and north, particularly Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina. Some came from prominent families, were well-educated, and had sufficient economic resources to purchase land or establish themselves as merchants. Demopolis also attracted a substantial number of immigrants from German-speaking parts of Europe; most were artisans or merchants. Isaac Marx, a German immigrant who arrived in Demopolis in the 1840s, was one of the town's first Jewish residents. He became a successful merchant who operated a general store at the corner of Main and Capitol Streets. Other Jews, including members of Marx's extended family, joined him in Demopolis in the 1850s and 1860s. In 1858, they formed the B'nai Jeshurun congregation.^{viii}

The population of antebellum Demopolis included enslaved African-Americans who lived and worked in the town's dwellings and businesses. In the 1830s and 1840s, the slave population in Marengo County increased rapidly as white planters transported and purchased slaves to work on the county's cotton plantations.^{ix} Although most of the slaves in Marengo County worked in the cotton fields, some lived and worked in the houses, artisan shops, stores, and hotels of Demopolis. According to local oral tradition, many of the town's bricklayers and brick makers were African-American.^x

Among the African-American population in antebellum Demopolis was a small number of free blacks. According to federal census records, twelve free blacks lived in Marengo County in 1840, and thirty-seven in 1850. Although census records do not include information on the free black population in Demopolis, it is likely that many of the county's free blacks lived in the town.^{xi} Local historian Winston Smith identified several free African-Americans in antebellum Demopolis. In 1843, the town marshal threatened to evict a man named Scott for "unlawful acts and keeping a disorderly house"; merchant Gottlieb Breitling intervened in the case and Scott and his family were allowed to remain in Demopolis. Peter Lee was a skilled carpenter and slave who purchased his freedom by 1850, likely using wages he earned from being hired out. Casey Long was a free black carpenter as well, and worked on the construction, renovation, and expansion of Gaineswood, Nathan Bryan Whitfield's plantation on the edge of town.^{xii}

A few antebellum dwellings remain within the historic district to illustrate the prosperity of antebellum Demopolis. While virtually all of the antebellum commercial buildings and modest dwellings have been demolished, several examples of planter-class and middle-class dwellings remain. For example, Bluff Hall (405 N. Commissioners Avenue) was built in 1832 for Francis Strother Lyon, a lawyer and planter who served in the United States and Confederate Congresses and in the Alabama State Senate. Dr. Cincinnatus Ashe, a physician, built a Gothic Revival-style house on Strawberry Street; the house was moved to its present location on South Commissioners Avenue. Other examples include the Curtis House (510 N. Main Street), the Lyon-Lamar House (102 S. Main Street), the house at 101 S. Main Street, and the Cornish House (201 S. Strawberry Street).

In early 1861, when news reached Demopolis that Alabama had joined other southern states in seceding from the United States, white residents organized a parade to celebrate the occasion. Most voters in Marengo County supported secession in order to protect the right to own slaves. Some white residents – including Gaius Whitfield, the wealthiest man in the county – opposed leaving the Union, but nevertheless backed the Confederacy after the war began. By the end of the war, more than 1,000 men from Marengo County had enlisted in the Confederate Army.^{xiii}

Demopolis became a key supply center for the Confederate Army during the war largely because of its location along the Alabama and Mississippi Rivers Railroad. Organized in 1850, the railroad linked Selma and Uniontown, Alabama by 1858. Construction of the rail line to Demopolis began in 1860, and was in progress when the Civil War began in 1861. In the spring of 1862, after the destruction of the Memphis and Charleston Railroad in Tennessee, the Alabama and Mississippi Rivers Railroad became an important east-west rail line through the Confederate States. Together with other railroads, it linked Selma, Alabama – where the Confederacy maintained a large arsenal and foundry – with Meridian, Mississippi. As a result, the Confederate government pushed for the railroad to be completed as quickly as possible. To help speed construction, the Confederate government loaned the railroad company $150,000 interest-free.^{xiv}

Demopolis engineer A.S. Gaines supervised the construction of the railroad, which was built by slaves from local plantations. On November 1, 1862, the railroad was completed to Demopolis, with the tracks entering on the north side of town and terminating at the upper steamboat landing at the intersection of Childress Street and Commissioners Avenue. Upon reaching the upper landing, freight and passengers transferred to steamboats that carried them to the tracks opposite McDowell's landing, approximately four miles away. By early 1864, the tracks through Demopolis had been re-routed along Franklin Street to Desonette Street, where they turned southwest towards McDowell's landing.^{xv}

During the war, the Confederate government maintained several facilities in Demopolis, including a commissary, quartermaster's offices and warehouses, an ordnance depot, a hospital, and the medical purveyor's office, where medical supplies were organized and distributed. In addition, a large military camp on the outskirts of town housed from several hundred to several thousand paroled prisoners of war, including Confederate soldiers who had been captured by Union troops when Vicksburg fell in 1863. Confederate President Jefferson Davis visited the camp in October 1863.^{xvi} After the fall of Vicksburg, the Confederate forces constructed fortifications in preparation for the possibility of attack by Union troops; portions of these fortifications are still visible on West Pettus Street. However, the Union attack never came. From February to May 1864, Confederate General Leonidas K. Polk had his headquarters in Demopolis, and increased troops in anticipation of an attack by Union General William T. Sherman. However, Sherman bypassed Demopolis, as did Union General James H. Wilson in 1865.^{xvii}

After the Civil War ended in 1865, slaves in Demopolis, and throughout the former Confederacy, gained their freedom. Immediately following emancipation, freed people had little or no property, and their legal status and rights as freed people were undefined, making them vulnerable to unchecked violence and exploitation. In 1865, the federal government established the Freedmen's Bureau, which oversaw labor contracts, provided legal assistance to freed people, and supplied them with food, clothing, education, and health care. The office of the Bureau's district superintendent for Marengo County and surrounding counties was located in Demopolis, where the Freedmen's Bureau operated a hospital and two schools.^{xviii}

After emancipation, African-Americans claimed their religious independence by establishing their own churches. In 1868, a Baptist congregation that had formed on Gaineswood plantation during slavery founded Morning Star Baptist; Methodists formed African Methodist Episcopal (A.M.E.) Zion Church the following year.^{xix} During Radical Reconstruction (1865-1877), African-Americans in Alabama also enjoyed a brief period of political power in the Republican Party and won election to state and local offices. Two African-Americans from Demopolis served in the state legislature during this period: Methodist minister Edward R. Rose in 1868, and Franklin Henry Threat in 1874. James Caldwell was a member of the Demopolis Town Council in 1869 and on the Marengo County Commission in 1869-1870.^{xx} However, this era of political power was short-lived. In 1874, the conservative, white Democratic Party won over white Republicans and secured control of state politics.^{xxi}

In the decades following the end of the Civil War, Jews from Europe and from other cities in Alabama settled in Demopolis, joining the small Jewish community that developed before the war. One of the most successful of the post-bellum Jewish immigrants was Morris Mayer, a German businessman who came to Demopolis in 1866. Circa 1870, he established a general store on Walnut Street. His brother Ludwig Mayer joined him in the business, which grew to become one of the largest retail establishments in Demopolis.^{xxii}

After the war ended, the Alabama and Mississippi Rivers Railroad began civilian operations, and a bridge over the Tombigbee River was constructed. With railroad and river routes reopened, Demopolis resumed its status as a shipping point and processing center for the cotton trade. Cotton production in the Black Belt remained below pre-war levels through much of the 1870s, but the presence of the railroad set the stage for Demopolis's continued importance as a market for Black Belt farmers.^{xxiii}

A fire, a financial panic, and a flood in the 1870s slowed economic recovery in Demopolis. In 1872, a fire swept through downtown Demopolis, destroying stores along Washington and Strawberry Streets. The fire, combined with a nationwide financial panic in 1873, led to the failure of several businesses. In 1874, high waters on the Tombigbee River flooded portions of the town, destroying more buildings.^{xxiv}

New South, 1880-1929

Between 1880 and 1929, Demopolis experienced a period of growth that is reflected in its architecture; a substantial number of the historic buildings that remain within the Demopolis Historic District date to this period. The growth of Demopolis during this period illustrates the effort by civic and business leaders throughout the South to bring prosperity back to the region and create a "New South." They urged communities to reduce their historic reliance on agriculture and to develop new industries, transportation routes, and financial institutions. Although Demopolis continued to rely heavily on agriculture, it attracted some industry and improved its transportation networks.^{xxv} Yet, even as it brought economic growth, the "New South" era also brought disfranchisement of African-Americans and poor whites, and the imposition of racial segregation.

In an 1887 pamphlet, the Demopolis City Council boasted that the city was "the commercial centre of as magnificent [an] agricultural region as can be found in the South." Cotton remained the dominant crop; each year, local farmers brought 15,000 to 20,000 bales of cotton to the town, where it was "shipped direct from this point to eastern spinners and for foreign export."^{xxvi} Cotton processing and shipping facilities were typically located on the edges of town or just outside the town limits. For example, by 1898, John C. Webb owned a cotton warehouse, gin, and compress at the west end of Franklin Street, adjacent to both a steamboat wharf and the rail line. A cottonseed oil factory was located in this area as well.^{xxvii}

Thanks to improvements in river navigation and the construction of a new railroad and roadways, Demopolis remained a transportation hub on the western Black Belt. By 1915, a series of locks and dams on the Tombigbee and Black Warrior Rivers improved navigation.^{xxviii} In the 1920s, the St. Louis-San Francisco Railway laid tracks just east of Demopolis, connecting the town with Kansas City and Memphis to the northwest and the port of Pensacola, Florida to the south.^{xxix} Increases in the number of automobiles in the first three decades of the 20th century spurred the development of improved roadways. In 1919, the Dixie Overland Highway (U.S. Highway 80) was constructed just south of Demopolis, placing the town along a major long-distance route for automobile traffic. The construction of the highway's bridge over the Tombigbee River gained national attention as a result of a unique fundraising effort – a rooster auction. Held in the Demopolis public square, the auction featured roosters donated by Helen Keller, President Woodrow Wilson, the leaders of Great Britain, France, Italy, and others.^{xxx}

In addition to helping Demopolis retain its position as a regional agricultural center, transportation improvements helped the town attract industry. Most of the industries in Demopolis were small operations that processed timber, cotton, and dairy products from the surrounding farm land. Between 1900 and 1929, several lumber mills, a planing mill, a spoke and handle factory, a stave factory, a textile mill, and a creamery were located within three miles of the town. Circa 1900, a cement factory was constructed east of town, on the Black Warrior River, taking advantage of readily available lime deposits in the area.^{xxxi} These industries helped maintain economic stability in Demopolis in the early 20th century, just as local cotton farmers were facing falling prices and the destruction by the boll weevil, an insect that feeds on cotton plants.

Civic improvements in the late 19th and early 20th centuries both reflected the prosperity of Demopolis and represented a way to attract more commercial and industrial investment to the town. Efforts to improve the town's appearance were particularly evident in the public square. Sidewalks, trees, a fountain, and a gazebo/bandstand gave the square a more park-like appearance.^{xxxii} Other efforts at beautification included the installation of sidewalks and trees along town streets, and the construction of grassy medians on Main Street.^{xxxiii} The town government also renovated and expanded municipal buildings on the square, and installed a water works, electric light plant, and a sewer system.^{xxxiv} In 1897, Demopolis took charge of its own school district, which was segregated by race. In 1913, the town government built a new public school for white students, but did not erect a brick school for African-American students until 1920.^{xxxv}

The inequality in educational facilities for whites and African-Americans in Demopolis was emblematic of the discrimination blacks faced in the "New South." By the 1880s, state and local governments in Alabama and throughout the former Confederacy enacted laws that required racial segregation. The Alabama constitution of 1901 disfranchised African-Americans, closing most political and legal avenues to challenging the imposition of racial segregation or fighting discrimination in employment or public education. However, through fraternal organizations and churches, African-Americans organized to support schools and to provide social services. They established businesses as well; these were concentrated along Strawberry Street between Franklin Avenue and Washington Avenue and in the eastern part of town. Most of these establishments were patronized primarily or exclusively by African-Americans, but local residents recall that some of the black-owned cafes and bars in east Demopolis in the early 20th century served both whites and blacks. Several African-Americans became successful carpenters, including John Wesley Banks, Sol Trueblood, Conner Young, and Robert Jones, Sr.^{xxxvi}

Throughout the late 19th and early 20th centuries, the town's Jewish citizens made up a notable portion of the town's business owners. In his reminiscences about the city's Jewish community, Jacob Koch recalled that there were about twenty-five Jewish-owned businesses in Demopolis circa 1920. One of them was Julius Rosenbush, who immigrated to the United States in 1880 and came to Demopolis in 1894. He established a furniture business that remained in operation for over 100 years. As prosperous merchants and bankers, several members of the Jewish community in Demopolis held influential positions in the city, serving as mayors, town councilmen and directors of the local bank.^{xxxvii}

The expansion of downtown Demopolis and the construction of new housing between 1880 and 1930 illustrate the town's success as a small but growing "New South" town. Between 1884 and 1930, the commercial district spread east and west along Washington Avenue, as well as north and south along Walnut Street. New businesses included the Demopolis Inn (1892), the Braswell Theatre (1902), the Elks Theater (1915) as well as automobile dealerships and service stations.^{xxxviii} Large, high-style residences illustrate the success of business owners, professionals, and planters, while the more modest dwellings reflect growth in the town's economy and population. African-American neighborhoods developed primarily in south and east Demopolis, in areas annexed by the town in the late 19th or early 20th centuries.^{xxxix}

The 1890s inaugurated what one minister dubbed "a New Church era in Demopolis."^{xi} Between 1890 and 1905, the white Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Catholic congregations constructed new churches or improved their existing buildings. In the early 1890s, members of the growing Jewish community built Temple B'nai Jeshurun at the corner of Main and Monroe.^{xii} Between 1900 and 1920, the African-American congregations at AME Zion and Morning Star Baptist replaced their church buildings.^{xiii} These new and improved houses of worship reflect the prosperity of Demopolis during this period as well as its racial and religious diversity.

The Great Depression and Post-War Prosperity, 1930-1962

In the 1930s, Demopolis suffered the economic effects of the Great Depression. Following the stock market crash of 1929, the United States economy declined rapidly, resulting in high unemployment and poverty throughout the 1930s. Manufacturing and agricultural production in Marengo County plummeted. The annual value of manufactures in Marengo County declined from $3,064 in 1930 to $1,073 in 1940, and the value of dairy products fell by 45%. The decline in agricultural production was even more dramatic. In 1939, the total value of crops harvested in the county was approximately 35% of what it was in 1929. The value of Marengo County cotton fell from $3,526,405 in 1929 to $487,431 in 1939.^{xiii} With farmers struggling and manufacturing facilities closing, fewer people came to Demopolis to buy and sell goods, and those that did come to the town had little money to spend. As a result, businesses closed and construction slowed.^{xliv}

Although construction in Demopolis slowed as a result of the economic hardships of the 1930s, it did not come to a halt. The Marengo Theater, for instance, opened in 1935. Members of the Webb family, which owned cotton shipping and processing facilities and a lumber yard, built large, Colonial Revival-style houses on West Capitol Street and on North Commissioners Avenue in the 1930s. Construction of smaller houses continued as well.

During World War II (1941-1945), residents of Demopolis organized a civilian defense group to support the war effort. Mayor N.C. Floyd led the group, which organized salvage drives, taught first-aid classes, and distributed posters.^{xlv} Merchants struggled to get merchandise in the midst of wartime shortages.^{xlvi} After the war, cotton prices and production, which had begun to decline in the 1930s, fell even further. A 1953 article in the Tuscaloosa News declared that "cotton is no longer king" in Demopolis. The beef cattle, dairy, and timber industries were prospering, and "Demopolis is fast becoming one of the leading industrial centers in West Alabama." In the 1950s, a paper mill, a chemical plant, and a textile mill were established, and the cement factory east of town continued to operate. In addition, the town remained a business and commercial center for local farmers as well as being the home of Bryan W. Whitfield Memorial Hospital, which opened in 1953.^{xlvii}

With the proliferation of the automobile, much of the post-World War II commercial and industrial construction took place beyond the city's outskirts, particularly along highways such as U.S. Route 80 (the Dixie Overland Highway). The downtown area expanded only modestly, with the construction of a few commercial buildings along its northern, southern, and eastern edges. Among the new buildings were several automobile-related businesses, such as dealerships, service stations, and gas stations.^{xlviii}

Demopolis gained more than three-thousand residents between 1940 and 1960, nearly doubling its population. Some of these new residents likely moved to Demopolis from nearby rural areas, reflecting a statewide decline in the rural population.^{xlix} The number of Jews living in the city declined during this period, mostly as a result of the children of Jewish residents moving out of the area. In the 1950s, in response to a dwindling congregation, the local synagogue demolished the 1890 temple and replaced it with a smaller building.ⁱ

1962-2012

In the 1960s, African-Americans in Demopolis worked to abolish racial segregation, to secure their civil rights, and receive equal treatment by employers and businesses. In the spring of 1965, civil rights protests by school children garnered national attention.ⁱⁱ In the 1970s, the city fully integrated its public schools.ⁱⁱⁱ

The Jewish population in Demopolis continued to decline in the late 20th century. By the early 1980s, thirteen Jews lived in Demopolis. In 1999, Bert Rosenbush, Jr., grandson of furniture store owner Julius Rosenbush, was the only Jew residing in the town.ⁱⁱⁱⁱ

The population and economy of Demopolis continued to grow in the late 20th century, despite the closure of several of the factories in the city. In the early 21st century, retail development along the highways at the edge of town increased, while many downtown commercial buildings shifted from retail use to offices.^{lv}

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

The boundaries of the Demopolis Historic District are indicated on an accompanying scaled map. The map was based on information obtained from U.S.G.S. topographic maps, the county tax assessor, and U.S.G.S. satellite images.

Demopolis Historic District
Name of Property

Marengo, AL
County and State

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

The boundary includes the central portions of the city of Demopolis that retain sufficient integrity to convey a sense of the historic time and place of the district.

Date of Return: 12/20/12

Reason for Return

The Demopolis Historic District nomination is being returned for technical revisions and to correct a procedural error.

This nomination is for a historic district amendment and boundary increase; two actions combined in one nomination—amending the already listed district and expanding the district boundaries. These two processes need to be better clarified within this revised document. The Demopolis Historic Business District was listed in 1979.

Please review the original nomination inventory and clarify those properties to determine if they still remain contributing resources in the revised inventory description. Reference the 1979 property inventory numbers in the amended nomination since these properties are now assigned different numbers. In Section 5, revise the “number of contributing resources previously listed,” if necessary. Do these sixty-eight resources still contribute or are some now considered noncontributing?

Please clarify if the amended acreage of 790 acres is only for the new properties being added. Refer to the National Register Bulletin, How to Complete the National Register Registration Form, pages 71-72, for further guidance.

There is no indication that the Federal Preservation Officer for the USPS was contacted regarding nomination of the Post Office as part of the district. Please provide a copy of the notification letter.

Dear Ms. Shull:

Enclosed please find a revised nomination as requested by Lisa Deline for the:

Demopolis Historic District
 Demopolis, Marengo County, Alabama
 Reference No.: 12001021

The original nomination for this historic district was received by the National Park Service on October 26, 2012. It was returned to and received by our office on February 4, 2013 with a request for clarifications. We believe the nomination is now in order. Your consideration of this revised nomination is appreciated.

Truly Yours,

Frank W. White
