DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Beach Chalet stands at 1000 Great Highway, at the western extreme of Golden Gate Park, overlooking the Pacific Ocean. It was built in 1925 as a modified Spanish-Moorish style pavilion to house a municipal restaurant, replacing another "Chalet" restaurant that had seriously deteriorated. Its predecessor was a wooden Victorian style building, often referred to as the "Swiss Chalet", constructed by architect W.Q Banks in 1900. That original lunch room and restaurant was located just across the highway, which was then a wide dirt track.

The existing structure, measuring 58' x 104', was commissioned by the Recreation and Park Department of San Francisco as a replacement pavilion, for $60,000. Designed by Willis Polk, the attractive Beach Chalet is a low, horizontal unit without architectural pretension. A white stucco building roofed with handwrought, terra cotta barrel tiles, its simple style is well suited to the site. Almost devoid of external ornament, there is little for the elements to corrode, and the stucco, wood sash, and glass exterior materials have withstood major weathering effects for over fifty years. Surrounded on three sides by aging cypress trees, the structure was designed as a two-story platform. The straightforward modular pattern has a ground floor arcade with eight pairs of doric columns, defining seven interior bays. The glass and wood frame facade overlooks a spectacular view of the ocean, and the Ocean Beach area north to the Cliff House.

The interior of the building is decorated with extensive artwork. On the ground floor, 1,500 square feet of walls, ceiling and stairwell were decorated with frescos in 1936 by Lucien Labaudt. The murals are framed with mosaic work, designed by Labaudt and executed by Primo Caredio. Several supportcolumns and the stair railings were embellished with Michael von Meyer's sculpture. The exterior front porch is decorated with a 6' diameter mosaic of the Seal of the Park Commission, which was incorporated into Polk's original design.

The Beach Chalet remains intact, but has been poorly maintained. Although the foundation has deteriorated the superstructure is reasonably sound, except the roof, which is in very poor condition. Minor interior alterations have been made to both floors, but they are of no great consequence. The murals are dirty and damaged, virtually unlit and partly concealed by the existing back bar. However, they are structurally sound, and deserve cleaning, repair and restoration to their original condition.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Beach Chalet is a unique San Francisco structure, known for the role it has played as a local institution, for its distinctive architecture that celebrates California's rich cultural heritage, and for the colorful, descriptive frescos that decorate the interior of the structure.

The Chalet has had a checkered career since its opening in June 1925. Originally, the ground floor served as a "commodious rest room" for bathers from the beach. A large room scattered with wicker furniture, it was constructed with arched Moorishstyle windows and doorway, and a beamed ceiling of hewn timber. Upstairs was a restaurant, seating 200 diners. One local newspaper described the chalet restaurant as "an ideal spot for a pleasant meal and a view of the ocean."

The popular local eatery was taken over in 1930 by two sisters, Hattie and Minnie Mooser, and run as a tearoom. During World War II, the Army converted the Beach Chalet into coastal defense headquarters. After the war, it was boarded up for several years.

In 1947, under the instigation of William McCarthy, a World War II veteran and former commander of the Joseph P. McQuaide Post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the chalet was reopened. Rented by the V. F. W. for a nominal monthly fee, they ran a bar on the first floor and used the upstairs rooms for meetings, parties, and occasional weddings. Now an informal local gathering place for athletes, joggers and others who use the Ocean Beach area, the bar has seen some turbulent times, frequented by beach gangs during the 1950's and once raided by police for showing pornographic films at a private party.

The Beach Chalet was the last design of noted San Francisco architect Willis Polk, who died in 1924, before the completion of the structure. Simple and streamlined in appearance, the building reflects a casual sophistication achieved by Polk after 35 years of design. This building also reflects Polk's interest in historical stylistic features, which he aften incorporated into his work. The Chalet is constructed in the Spanish Colonial style that became popular in a revival movement begining around 1890 throughout California and the Southwest. Polk was especially fond of working in stucco and wood, blending the elegant detailing of Spanish Baroque architecture with the simplified provincial forms of the Spanish Missions and Haciendas found throughout the area. His Beach Chalet, a modest adaptation of these direct cultural influences, fits naturally into its stark, sandy site, The low hipped roof and thick white stucco are balanced by the arched entrances, the open air arcade with a row of supporting columns and a second story facade of glass windows that contrast the sense of solidarity while remaining cool and open to the marine view.

The simplified style of the architecture is given colorful definition and character by the work of several San Francisco artists, including fashion designer and muralist Lucien Labaudt. Funding for the chalet's art work was provided by the Federal Art Project division of the Works Progress Administration, established by Franklin Roosevelt in 1935. This unique sponsership program was created in response to the desires of socialist-oriented artists' organizations and the practical necessities of setting up an effective art-relief program. A new artistic era was developing, which produced an expansion of the role of art as a means of social communication and change. Reviving an ancient Mexican artistic tradition, and responding to the influential work of artist Diego Rivera, muralists began to produce numerous public frescos, in an attempt to reach a "people's audience". According to his W.P.A. biography, Labaudt explained that the Beach Chalet murals "are to be specifically painted so that people without an understanding of art may recognize and enjoy the subject whether or not they are moved by considerations of design."

As in his earlier mural work, Labaudt employed the fresco technique, an ancient art form using earth pigment colors that are brushed directly onto a wet plaster surface. It is painstaking work because the artist must complete the section prepared before the plaster dries, or chip out dried blank spaces and hardened mistakes the next day. Working in sections of approximately two square feet per day, Labaudt spent over two years (1936 and 1937) creating his frescos.

Labaudt's Beach Chalet murals were conceived, in the social realist style, as a living record of San Francisco during the 1930's. The walls are filled with silent, colorful ghosts of the past who grace the familiar city-scapes with their many moods - playful, restive and contemplative. Labaudt's "San Francisco Scenes" serve as a random sampling of life at that time, filled with everyday working people, elbow to elbow with figures from the artistic and power establishments.

The murals are complemented by Primo Caredio's often whimsical mosaics, including an Indian shooting an arrow in the direction of the men's room, and Michael von Meyer's wood sculpture. A row of four free-standing, square-shaped support posts run longitudinally through the room. The posts were intricately carved by von Meyer, with an algae-like pattern of shallow incised designs. Von Meyer also carved the magnolia wood balustrade for the stairway. Elaborately designed, the newell-post is an octupus whose long tenacles twist the length of the staircase, entwining various merpeople and tiny divers.

It is fortunate that the building and these irreplaceable artworks have survived the relentless elements at the beach, and the constant stream of bar and entertainment patrons in the last thirty years. The City of San Francisco has recently entered into a thirty-year lease with Restoration Associates, an innovative San Francisco development firm, to completely rehabilitate and restore the Beach Chalet to as-new condition, and operate it as a first class restaurant and place of entertainment. This arrangement, initiated and supervised by the San Francisco Recreation and Park Commission, should again give the people of the Bay Area a truly fine dining experience in Golden Gate Park, and hopefully spur a new renaissance of the long neglected Ocean Beach area of San Francisco.
