County and State

Section 7 Page 1

Humboldt, population 941 (US Census, 2000) is located in the northwestern portion of Richardson County approximately 90 miles southeast of Lincoln, the state capital. Richardson County, in turn is situated in the extreme southeast corner of Nebraska. The community was platted immediately north of the North Fork of the Nemaha River and the terrain surrounding Humboldt is typical of dissected plains found throughout the county and the Great Plains¹. The economy of the Humboldt and the surrounding area is primarily agricultural in nature.

The Humboldt Commercial Historic District encompasses those buildings that face the public square in downtown Humboldt and includes 28 contributing buildings, 1 contributing site, 3 contributing structures, 4 contributing objects, and 8 non-contributing buildings (see Table 1). These buildings range in date from the mid to late 1870's up to 1947, the year the newest contributing building was constructed. The character of this historic district is decidedly commercial, though single-family residences are present immediately outside the boundaries of the commercial historic district.

The center of the Humboldt Commercial District, both literally and figuratively, is the Public Square (RH04-039). Part of the original city plat, O. J. Tinker transferred ownership of this block to the community of Humboldt "to be maintained as a spot of beauty and refreshment"² In fact, the public square continues to be maintained as directed by O.J. Tinker and has been counted as a contributing site.

In 1912, a new concrete bandstand was constructed and dedicated to Tinker. Painted white, this circular bandstand stands proudly in the center of the public square, supported by four chamfered pillars. A horizontal concrete rail surrounds the upper stage of the bandstand and is decorated with pilasters that alternate in size adding both safety and an element of visual interest. Bronze plaques were placed in two of the columns; the first reads "PRESENTED TO THE CITY JAN. 12, 1871 DEDICATED JUNE 15, 1912" while the second reads "ERECTED IN MEMORY OF O.J. TINKER DONER [sic] OF THE CITY PARK." The concrete bandstand is considered to be a contributing structure.

Concrete was also used to form four arches that form attractive gateways into the public square. Though their exact construction date is unknown, it is reasonable to believe that these concrete arches were built at the same time as the concrete bandstand described above. Placed at each of the cardinal directions these arches frame a view of the 1912 bandstand for the pedestrian entering the square. The arches were designed to look as if they are resting on two columns, and the haunches are decorated using small, slightly recessed areas that imply stone at a glance. A concrete pilaster that supports three globe lights projects from the crown of each arch. Concrete sidewalks emanate under each arch intersecting under the bandstand and crossing the entire length and width of the public square. These concrete arches are considered contributing objects.

Sometime after the construction of the circular bandstand, a rectangular stage was added near the southeast corner of the public square. Presumably added to host larger groups, this stage was constructed of concrete block and sports tubular metal rails on the southern side. Concrete steps provide access on the northern side of the stage. This concrete stage is considered to be a contributing structure within this historic district.

A fountain constructed in 1911 of cobblestones and concrete stands immediately west of the bandstand. The local Lions group painstakingly rehabilitated this fountain in the 1980's. Various concrete park benches offer comfortable seating for visitors to the square, and a small playground near the northeast corner of square provides recreational opportunities for area children.

Most recently, a memorial to all Richardson County veterans was placed at the southwest corner of the square. This memorial is constructed of brick and concrete and forms a curved wall. The names of Richardson County veterans are inscribed in individual bricks. A granite boulder with a memorial plaque, military hardware and an American flag flying high on a pole complete this memorial.

The fountain, concrete park benches, and the veteran's memorial are not substantial in size and scale and are not counted as resources for the purposes of this National Register nomination.

The physical integrity of the Humboldt Public Square is excellent. This public space has been well maintained and is an obvious source of community pride.

The Public Square is bounded on all sides by brick streets. These wide brick streets contribute to the overall setting, feeling and association of this historic district and help to provide a sense of continuity throughout this commercial district. Surrounding the Public Square, businesses line these historic streets each facing the Public Square. This important feature of the Humboldt Commercial Historic District has been counted as a contributing structure.

Beginning on Third Street at the southwest corner of the historic district, the Humboldt Auditorium (RH04-036) is immediately recognizable as an auditorium constructed by a public works program. Begun in 1941 and finished in only 500 days, this two-story WPA building was constructed using locally quarried limestone and concrete. Once used to house city offices, the auditorium has recently been the subject of a feasibility study sponsored by the Humboldt Community Foundation. This feasibility study is designed to determine how the auditorium can best serve the current needs of the community.

The next three buildings along Third Street are decidedly very different in age and in construction styles. The F.W. Porak building (RH04-144) was constructed in 1911 and is immediately adjacent to the auditorium. Simple in style, this commercial building features a glass storefront with a recessed central door. The most striking feature of this building is the stained glass transom that spans the entire storefront. "F.W. Porak" is centered on the transom. Brick corbelling creates visual interest at the parapet level. A two story brick building located at 630 Third Street was constructed around 1882 has three arched windows across the upper story. The windows themselves remain open and the arched brick lintels and the brick sill course is clearly visible and hints at the age of this building.

The J.M. McDonald Company Store (RH04-145) is located prominently on a corner lot and was completed in 1947. Borrowing a bit from the Art Moderne style with its curved front corner, this two-story department store is the youngest contributing building on the square, and quite likely caused quite a stir when completed. The lower floor of this building is quite obviously designed to showcase products with large display windows and a recessed entryway flanked by the curved windows of the front corner of the building.

Across Central Avenue, the buildings range in age from west to east from the 1920's to the 1880's, beginning with three one story brick buildings all constructed around 1920. Situated in the middle of this block, the B.T. Hnizda building (RH04-033) was constructed circa 1902. A one-story building featuring two recessed entryways with cast iron decorative detailing that is consistent with a structure built around the turn of the century in Nebraska. Some modernization of the storefronts occurred in the 1920's.

The next two buildings on this block are all two-story brick buildings with upper stories that feature full height double hung windows with arched brick lintels and brick sill courses. The building at 718 Third Street was constructed circa 1884 and features another storefront modified or modernized sometime in the 1920's. 722 - 730 Third Street (RH04-035) was also constructed around 1884. The storefront at 722 Third Street has seen slight modifications, however, the storefront at 730 Third Street features the original configuration and materials including a recessed central entryway, cast iron decorative elements and full height display windows. A pressed metal cornice with brackets is intact and spans the entire building. Bruun Memorial Library (RH04-034) was constructed in 1883 as evidenced by the date stamp in the pressed metal cornice. The windows of this two-story brick building are arched and have heavy decorative window hoods. The cornice is fashioned of pressed metal and is bracketed.

Turning the corner and moving north along East Square, once again, a mix of building styles and ages are evident. These buildings range from a one-story brick building (310-312 East Square) constructed around 1915 to the four two story buildings that extend to Fourth Street. Marburger's Shoes (RH04-031), a two story brick building near the middle of this block was constructed in 1884. This building features two four over four windows and a door, each with heavy decorative hoods.

Facing south, the commercial buildings along Fourth Street are two story brick or stone buildings that range in age from the 1880's to 1927. The Independent Order of Odd Fellows (I.O.O.F.) building (RH04-030) was constructed in 1917 and features a stepped parapet and decorative brickwork. Immediately adjacent to the I.O.O.F. building, 719-721 Fourth Street (RH04-029) was constructed circa 1886 and like its contemporaries throughout the square, has windows with heavy decorative window hoods. The stone building at 707 Fourth Street (RH04-027) was constructed sometime in the late 1880's and features arched windows and a pressed metal cornice. The Zulek building (RH04-026) located on the corner of Fourth Street and Central Avenue was complete in 1898. Visual interest was added to this building by using different colored brick to create patterns. Brick corbelling at the parapet level completes the decorative brickwork.

The commercial buildings along West Square face east and once again have a mix of one and two story structures. The two story building at 325 West Square (RH04-142) was built as a garage, but also functioned as a Pepsi Cola bottling factory in the 1950's. The single bay, one-story brick building at 321 West Square was built as a garage in 1916 and served as such for several subsequent owners. Adjacent to this garage, stands another one-story brick building constructed in 1907. Originally housing a saloon, the Humboldt Standard moved to this location around 1911. One of the oldest buildings on the square, 301 West Square (RH04-037) was constructed in 1877. Constructed of limestone that has since been stuccoed, the storefront of this building features cast iron details.

The overall physical integrity of the Humboldt Commercial Historic District is good. The aspects of setting, feeling, and association are especially strong. Buildings along the square have seen changes that are consistent with a property or business owner's desire to modernize. Indeed, much of this modernization appears to have occurred in the 1920's. This date falls well within the period of significance for this historic district and the remodeling even becomes a part of the significant story associated with the City of Humboldt.

The Humboldt Commercial Historic District is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A at the local level for its association with the history and commercial development of Humboldt. The period of significance begins in 1877 with oldest extant building on the square, and ends in 1947 with the construction of the newest contributing building on the square. Only one building has been built on the square since 1947—the post office. Although Humboldt continues to be a local commercial center, the significant period of construction related to the District's built environment ended in 1947. Buildings built between 1877 and 1947 exhibit an overall continuity of design, general purpose and spatial organization, additionally defining the period of significance for the District. Significant dates include 1877 indicating the date of the oldest extant building; 1912 with the construction of the bandstand as a defining moment in the development of the community; and 1942 the year the WPA auditorium was built signaling a significant investment by the community in their downtown commercial square.

Settlers began arriving in what is now Richardson County by the early 1850's and the county was formally organized in 1855. Not long after the county was organized, O.J. Tinker and his family reached what would later become Humboldt. Tinker established a post office by 1867 and by the following year, the city was platted. The much anticipated Atchison and Nebraska railroad line reached the community in 1871 and Humboldt was finally incorporated in 1873.

It seems certain that from the time he arrived in the region, O.J. Tinker was determined to help build a community. The original plat included a good portion of O.J. Tinker's quarter section, by 1871, Tinker had taken the extraordinary step of deeding 2 acres of land for a public square a feature central to the Humboldt Commercial Historic District.

The community continued to grow, and by 1880 its population was 917. It was shortly after this census that many of the buildings currently standing on the square were constructed. Through the nineteen-teens, Humboldt continued to experience growth and enjoyed the additions of several professional garages to help maintain the burgeoning relationship with the automobile. It is likely that the brick streets were added during this period as well.

A well developed sense of dedication to the community and pride in that community can be measured by the construction of the bandstand in 1912. The Humboldt Standard stated that the construction of this bandstand took 75 tons of material and 10 hours of volunteer labor to complete.³

Humboldt reached a peak population of 1,455 in 1930. This statistic is consistent with the clues left behind in the built environment of the historic district. Many of the oldest buildings along the square were modified or modernized and several new buildings were constructed sometime in that decade between 1920 and 1930. The Humboldt Commercial Historic District documents the history of Humboldt through the built environment.

Dedication to the community and an unwavering desire to move the community forward becomes apparent once more with the construction of the WPA auditorium in 1942. In order to secure the funding for this WPA project, the community passed a $20,000 bond issue.⁴ The excitement of the community regarding construction of the auditorium is apparent in the news stories of the time. These stories took time to report on all of those details that would have been the talk of the town as the massive auditorium was under construction. The auditorium cost $80,000 to complete, and it was described as "a beautiful, substantial building, one that will stand for many, many years."⁵ Held on December 9, 1942, the dedication ceremony was held in the auditorium that was filled almost to capacity. The program praised the work of the men involved and also made mention that the construction of the Humboldt Auditorium was the last civil works project in area 6, that all efforts were diverted to the war effort and many of the skilled men had left for the war.⁶

The Humboldt Commercial Historic District has always been and remains an integral part of Humboldt and the surrounding region. The distinct Public Square lined with historic buildings gives a unique lasting impression of Humboldt. The Public Square continues to be well maintained, and the community is well aware of how important this defining feature is to Humboldt. In fact, each year, the Richardson County Fair is held on the Public Square, which represents a significant commitment on the part of the community.

The Humboldt Commercial District exemplifies the qualities of small- town, regional commercial centers. Over the course of some sixty years, the merchants, businessmen and citizens of Humboldt and the surrounding area were continually building, re-building and modernizing the buildings designed to service the needs of this part of Richardson County. Created and maintained through a long-term dedication to community pride by the citizens of Humboldt, this city square embodies the characteristics of commercial and community development of small Midwestern towns everywhere. The excellent historic integrity of the Public Square and the buildings that surround it are a testament to that dedication.

The history of the Public Square and the commercial district are decidedly linked. The Humboldt Commercial Historic District is eligible under Criterion A at the local level for its role in the commercial development of Humboldt. As a collection of properties, this historic district tells us something very significant about the way this community developed and continues to thrive.
