Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Brinson Family Historic District in Brinson, Georgia, consists of a group of five houses (one a parsonage) and a church clustered around and spreading out from a four-way intersection on the south side of this small, southwest Georgia town. With the exception of a sink hole located near the south edge of the district, the land in the district is flat. The district is located at the southern edge of the portion of Brinson laid out with a gridiron plan. The three properties north of Wainhurst Street-Bainbridge Street and within the gridiron area are small rectangular town lots. Those to the south are larger and irregular in shape, reflecting both the large expanses of undivided land in this area historically held by the Brinson family and the presence of the old Bainbridge-Donalsonville Road that angles into Brinson through this area. Buildings in the district are all wood-framed structures with weatherboard or shiplap siding. They date from sometime before 1890 to 1920. They range in size from a small one-story cottage to several large two-story houses.

The Simeon Brinson House, located in the southwest corner of the district on the south side of Wainhurst Street, is one of the largest, grandest, and oldest houses in the district. It was built in 1893 by Simeon Brinson, the town's founder and the progenitor of the family for whom the district is named. The house is a two-story Victorian Eclectic structure with weatherboard siding and Queen Anne detailing. Its plan is asymmetrical with a multi-gabled roofline, several projecting bays, and a wraparound front porch that echoes the line of the front bay. A kitchen/dining room to the rear which was originally attached to the house by a breezeway is now incorporated into the main house. The house has considerable exterior detailing including a porch elaborately trimmed with spindles and cutwork, and a second floor balcony and gable ends trimmed with decorative shingles. The interior has tongue-and-groove walls, wainscoting, and ceilings, period mantels, and elaborate door and window surrounds.

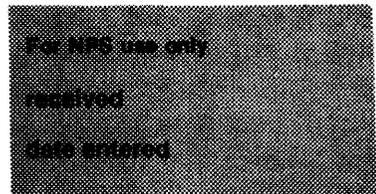

The Brinson-Russell House, located at the north edge of the district on Leon Street, was built by Simeon Brinson in 1890 for his son Jason Brinson on the occasion of his marriage. The house is a small, one-story, "L"-shaped cottage with shiplap siding. The heavy brick piers that support the front porch are a later addition. The oldest house in the district, the O'Neal-Brinson House located at the east edge of the district on Bainbridge Street, was built in two stages. The earliest part of the house, built in the decade or two before 1890, was a simple gable-roofed Victorian cottage with a front porch and probably exterior end chimneys. In 1905, when Jason Brinson moved to this house from the Brinson-Russell House, he added the front projecting "L". The present "L"-shaped front porch with its tapered columns resting on high brick piers is a Craftsman touch probably from the 1920s. The house is presently clad in aluminum siding.

The fourth house associated with the Brinson family is the Homer Hodges Brinson House, first built about 1909 and substantially remodeled in 1919-1920 by Simeon Brinson's second son. It is a large two-story house designed in an eclectic style with Craftsman- and Prairie-style influences. It has a hipped roof, weatherboard siding, a prominent wraparound porch, and a porte coch'ere. The deep overhang of the eaves, the shallow pitch to the main and porch roofs, and the strong horizontal emphasis of the front porch suggests the Prairie style. The detailing of the front door surround, the small second-story balcony, and the interior are Craftsman inspired. A historic two-story garage is located behind the house.

On opposite corners of the intersection of Leon Street and Wainhurst/Bainbridge Road are the Brinson Methodist Church, built in 1901, and the church parsonage, dating from about 1915. The church is a simple rectangular structure with shiplap siding and a gable roof surmounted by a small steeple. Windows are two-over-two double hung sash. The interior has board walls and ceiling, a small apse-like projection at the alter end, a shallow balcony, and an entrance area. The parsonage has shiplap siding and some very simple Craftsman detailing; it has an unusual plan with a recessed second floor. A historic garage is associated with the house.

Landscaping in the district is fairly extensive. At the heart of the district around the intersection, large shade trees planted close to the roads give the area a densely landscaped feeling which sets it off from the rest of Brinson. The historic pecan grove which stretches between the O'Neal-Brinson House and the H.H. Brinson House is a second strong landscape feature. Individual yards in the district are heavily planted with shade trees, flowering shrubs, ornamental trees such as palms and ornamental cedars, and grass. The H.H. Brinson House has a low masonry retaining wall that sets it off from the road. The entrance to the church is flanked by two large shade trees. There are no non-contributing structures in the district.

Boundary

The boundary for the district is drawn to encompass a contiguous, intact grouping of historic buildings in Brinson which relate historically to Simeon Brinson and his family. The buildings are surrounded, for the most part, by non-historic structures. Four small historic houses on the north side of Bainbridge Street opposite the district are not included because they are not associated with the Brinson family.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Brinson Family Historic District is historically significant in terms of architecture, landscape architecture, community planning and development, agriculture, commerce, and politics/government. These areas of significance support National Register listing under National Register Criteria A, B, and C.

Architecture

In terms of architecture, the five houses and one church in the district are significant for providing representative examples in Brinson of late 19th- and early 20th-century building types, styles, materials, and technologies. Both modest and fairly elaborate examples of Victorian Eclectic architecture and the Craftsman-influenced eclectic architecture of the early 20th century are represented in the district. The ca. 1880 O'Neal-Brinson House and the 1890 Brinson-Russell House with their one-story "L"-shaped layouts, gable rooflines, decorative attic vents (in the Brinson-Russell House), and rear ells are typical of the modest houses built throughout southwest Georgia around the turn of the century. The Craftsman-influenced porches on both houses document the "updating" that frequently occurred in the early 20th century as the Victorian styles became outmoded and the Craftsman style achieved widespread popularity. The ca. 1915 Methodist parsonage, although a rather idiosyncratic building with an unusual floor plan, also documents the influence of the Craftsman style with its exposed rafters and heavy porch supports.

The Simeon Brinson House and the Homer Hodges Brinson House are two of the very finest extant houses in the small town of Brinson. The 1893 Simeon Brinson House with its asymmetrical plan, wraparound porch trimmed with lacy cutwork, bay windows, balcony, and decorative shinglework is an excellent example of a late 19th-century, Queen Anne-influenced Victorian Eclectic house. The Homer Hodges Brinson House, completed in 1920, is a fine small-town example of the type of eclectic residential architecture popular in the early 20th century. It contains elements of the Craftsman, Prairie, and American Foursquare styles.

The 1901 Brinson Methodist Church is an extremely intact example of a simple vernacular wood-framed church; it is similar to many built around the turn of the century in small Georgia communities.

Landscape Architecture

In terms of landscape architecture, the district is significant for the extensively and historically landscaped yards of the individual houses in the district and for its historic pecan grove and street trees. The Simeon Brinson House and the Homer Hodges Brinson House in particular have yards planted with many varieties of shade trees, ornamental trees, flowering shrubs, and grass in the informal manner popular in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The H.H. Brinson House has a historic front walk and low retaining wall which set the yard off from the street. The Brinson Methodist Church is framed by two large shade trees planted on either side of its entrance at the time of its construction. The pecan grove between the O'Neal-Brinson House and the H.H. Brinson House was planted by Homer Hodges Brinson about 1915 and provides important documentation of this typical early 20th century south Georgia landscape feature. The district has a dense landscaped environment provided by the historic plantings associated with each house and the rows of street trees that sets it apart environmentally from the rest of Brinson.

Community Planning and Development, Politics and Government, Agriculture, Commerce

The district is significant in terms of community planning and development, politics and government, agriculture, and commerce for its associations with Simeon Brinson (1847-1918) and two of his sons, Jason Henry Brinson (1867-1940) and Homer Hodges Brinson (1878-1944). Simeon, for whom the town is named, bought large tracts of land in the area in the 1870s and, following the arrival of the railroad, had the area surveyed for a town in 1889. He served as an early postmaster and, after the town was incorporated in 1907, as its first mayor. He, and later his son Jason, farmed large quantities of land in the vicinity and ran the community's principal cotton warehouse and its only bank, all vitally important aspects of the area's agricultural economy. Jason also owned a general merchandise store. H.H. Brinson practiced medicine in Brinson. Together they contributed more than any other family to the ongoing life of Brinson.

Criteria Considerations

The Brinson Family Historic District is eligible for the National Register under Criteria "A" for its direct associations with the founding and growth of the town of Brinson and with the development of its agricultural economy. It is eligible under Criteria "B" for its direct associations with members of the Brinson family who founded and developed the town of Brinson and who served as its leading citizens. It is eligible under Criteria "C" for its period architecture and landscaping which combine to create a distinct historic environment.

Contributing/Non-Contributing Resources

6 contributing buildings (5 houses, 1 church)

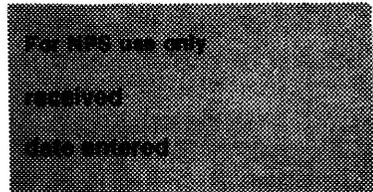

3 contributing landscape features

(overall informal front-yard landscaping, street trees, and pecan grove)
