Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The Conner House sits on a kind of bluff, overlooking a vast farm field that lies between the house and the White River. The yard is surrounded on three sides by a stone retaining wall. The rear faces a gravel road that connects the house with the other buildings making up the Conner Prairie Pioneer Settlement. This house is the only structure in the Settlement on its original site -- others have been moved in from other parts of the state or are new construction. The Settlement is a living museum, and a major tourist attraction for the area.

The house was renovated in the 1930s by the late Eli Lilly, founder of the Eli Lilly pharmaceutical company. The two-story Federal style house has a one-story kitchen addition at the south end of the back, which was rebuilt from partial ruin during the 1930s renovation. The foundation of the house is coursed stone. Walls are of red brick which were fired on the site, and are laid in common bond, except for the side facing the river, which is Flemish bond. The roof is wood shingles.

The river side features a full two-story gallery porch. This porch, and the window shutters featuring an acorn cut-out at the top of each, date from Mr. Lilly's renovation. This side is five bays across with six over six window sash in each bay. The central bay on the ground floor is a double door with transom. Openings here, as on the rear of the house, are flat-arched.

The rear of the house, which faces the road, has a one-story porch which extends across the back and along the side of the kitchen. This was probably built in the 1930s, along with a well that stands over the right side. A curved brick oven projects from the wall of the kitchen.

The interior of the house features a central hall with stairway, and four large rooms, two on each floor. Each room has a fireplace on the outside wall, with simple Adamesque designs, flanked by wall cabinets, one on each side. Most woodwork is simple and painted.

Builder/Architect

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The William Conner House is significant as a good example of the Federal style of architecture, and for the role of its builder, William Conner, in the settlement and development of central Indiana.

William Conner (1777-1855) and his brother, John, conducted a profitable trade with the Indians in Indiana. William was married to Mekinges, a daughter of Chief Anderson, of the Delaware Indians, and they opened a trading post on the White River in 1802. William served as a guide in Ohio during the War of 1812, and in 1818 witnessed the signing of the Treaty of St. Mary's, which extinguished all Indian titles to central Indiana. His wife and children left with the other Delawares, and in 1823 he built this house for his new white wife and their child.

In 1825 the General Assembly named him to be one of the three commissioners to lay out a road from Indianapolis to Fort Wayne. After his brother's death in 1826, William maintained John's interest in a store in Indianapolis, as well as operating his many farms, mills, and a distillery until the late 1840s. In 1830 William Conner became one of the founders of the Indiana Historical Society, and in 1831 joined a movement to promote common schools.

Conner sold his household goods in 1837 and left his farming operations in the care of a son, moving his residence nearer to Noblesville, where he remained active in commerce until his death.

ADDITIONAL DOCUMENTATION
WILLIAM CONNER HOUSE, HAMILTON
CO., TN

The purpose of this continuation sheet is to amend the information under Section 2, Location for the William Conner House National Register nomination (2-8-80). The house has not been moved or relocated in any way. It appears that the location of 30 Conner Lane was romanticized in order to give the house a specific address within the large parcel owned by Conner Prairie (Conner Prairie, a living history museum, owns the Conner House). Conner Lane never existed, nor are there any plans to create a Conner Lane. It would appear that Conner Prairie may have had plans to rename the path leading to the house "Conner Lane" at some point.

Therefore, the proper address should be the current address of the facility. The street & number blank should read "13400 Allisonville Road." The not for publication blank should read N/A.

Originally, the city or town blank read "Noblesville vicinity." Since the time of listing (2-8-80), the town of Fishers, Indiana, one of the fastest growing towns in the U.S., has annexed much of southeast Hamilton County, including the area of Conner Prairie. Therefore, the city/town blank should now read "Fishers," with the vicinity box left blank.

The state, county, and corresponding codes remain the same. The zip code blank should read "46038" (the full zip is 46038-4499).

The rest of the form should remain unchanged.
