DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Thomas Nast Home, "Villa Fontana," is a two-and-a-half story, white, clapboarded frame house with a mansard roof. It was built in 1860-61, was inhabited by Nast from 1873 to 1902, and is currently a private residence. The main body of the house, which fronts on MacCulloch Avenue, is five bays in front(south), by three bays on a side. The center bay in front is composed of a glassed-enclosed vestibule, and above, a small Palladian window, which is post-historic. The porch which stretched across the front of the house at ground level in Nast's occupancy, has been removed. The front roof is pierced by three dormers, and the sides, by two dormers. On the southeast corner of the house there is a glass-enclosed porch, with floorlength windows in a Palladian motif. There is a one-and-a-half story service wing attached to the rear wall at the northwest corner. It too has a mansard roof, and is pierced by a double and a single dormer on the west Running from west to east, behind the house is a driveway, marked by two brick columns, to a small white frame garage on the northeast corner of the property. The house sits on a corner lot, with MacCulloch Avenue on its south and Miller Road on its west. There are private houses to the east and north. The land surrounding the house is kept as lawn, with various There is a lead fountain as well, which also dates from trees and shrubs. Nast'soccupancy.

The interior of the house has been well-preserved in its historic appearance. The floor of Nast's bedroom has recently been restored to its original condition, and his study, where he did most of his drawing appears much the same. The interior is characterised by its excellent woodwork, which has since been painted, and by its interesting fireplaces.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Thomas Nast, the pre-eminent political and reform cartoonist in American politics, made Villa Fontana, in Morristown, New Jersey, his home from 1873 to 1902. Within this period, Nast, through his cartoons in Harper's Weekly, contributed immensely to the breakup of the Boss Tweed-Tammany Hall Ring which was plundering New York City at the time.

Villa Fontana, a handsome three-story, clapboard structure with a mansard roof, is currently privately owned, but continues to be relatively unchanged in appearance from Nast's day.

BIOGRAPHY

Somewhere in the United States there are probably a few people who are not familiar with three of our most popular political symbols, the Republican "elephant," the Democratic "donkey," and the Tammany "tiger." But how many of us have realized that those striking symbols came from one fertile, artful mind? Thomas Nast, one of America's greatest cartoonists, created them. Nast's political cartoons spoke boldly and decisively, leaving no doubt in the viewer's mind just what their point was. "Boss" William March Tweed's cry of anguish as Nast exposed his dishonesty is eloquent testimony to the effectiveness of the cartoonist's drawings:

Let's stop them d--d pictures. I don't care so much what the write about me--my constituents can't read, but d--nit, they can see pictures!

Nast's artistic talent early determined the course of his life. Born in Landau, Germany, on September 27, 1840, the young boy emigrated to America in 1846 with his mother; his father joined them in 1850. Both parents deprecated their son's ability to draw. They desired him to adopt a trade, but despite their objections, he took drawing lessons and at fifteen was employed by a leading magazine of the time, Leslie's Weekly. First hired at $4.00 a week, Nast threw himself into his work, learning much as he drew for the magazine. In 1860 he sailed to Europe, drawing wherever he went. Still of great interest are his sketches done while he marched with Garibaldi, whom he greatly admired. Nast returned in early 1861, and in September of the same year he married.

The great turning point in Nast's career came in the summer of 1862. At that time he joined Harper's Weekly, the Country's most popular picture magazine. Nast remained with Harper's for about twenty-five years, showering the Nation from his enviable spot with one telling cartoon after another. His vastly popular and patriotic drawings during the Civil War brought him quick fame, causing Abraham Lincoln to say that Nast had "been our best recruiting sergeant." During reconstruction he vigorously upheld "Radical Reconstruction," violently attacking President Andrew Johnson. A staunch admirer of Ulysses S. Grant, Nast's trenchant cartoons caused the general to say that Nast's pen had helped put him in the White House. Even during Grant's second term, when scandal filled the air like an evil-smelling smog, Nast could bring himself to draw only a single anti-Grant cartoon.

Of all of his work, Nast's devastating and searing cartoons directed against the Tweed Ring in New York City remain his most excellent. "Big Bill" (Tweed), "Brains" (Peter B. Sweeny), "Slippery Dick." (Richard B. Donnolly) and "O.K. Hall" (A. Oakly Hall) had looted the city of millions after the Civil War, while most of the city's press ignored their brazen plundering. Only Harper's Weekly attacked the robbers, with Nast's pen serving as a most effective lance. Nast's first anti-Tweed cartoon appeared on September 11, 1869. By March, 1870, Nast had so angered the plunderers that Tweed sought State legislative action against the artist. Also, some of Tweed's friendly press referred to the cartoonist as the "Nast-y artist of Harper's Hell Weekly."

Becoming more frightened than irked, especially after the New York Times joined Harper's in its crusade, the Ring sought to buy off its attackers. But the two papers only redoubled their efforts, with Nast infuriating Tweed. When a member of the Ring exposed the misdeeds of his cronies, Nast's cartoons hammered even more strongly against Tweed. Shortly after having been threatened by the Ring, as well as having been offered a fat bribe, Nast in November, 1871, published his most famous cartoon. It appeared on a double page, showing a packed Roman amphitheater, with a bloated, bearded Tweed in "Caesar" seat. Dominating the cemter of the drawing is a furious, snarling tiger, with paws holding down a prostrate figure, the "Republic." Beneath the cartoon was the caption: "The Tammany Tiger Loose—"What are you going to do about it?'" Thus did the Tammany tiger make its never to be forgotten initial appearance, and as Nast's biographer says:

In all the cartoons the world has even seen none has been so startling in its conception, so splendidly picturesque, so enduring in its motive of reform . . . 14

When Tweed's grasp on the city was finally broken, it was Nast who had done more than anyone else in felling him.

Although his pen remained as acute and penetrating as ever, Nast's work was never as effective in later years as it had been against Tweed. For one thing, Nast devoutly believed in Republicanism, so his political bias did not encourage general approval. He continued to draw for Harper's until 1887, but in that year he broke his long association with that publication. Ill-fortune followed, with demand for his work practically disappearing. Financial hardship overtook him, and it was because of that heataccepted a consularship in Guayaquil, Ecuador, in March, 1902. Shortly after arriving there, he died on November 30, 1902.

Fortune may be fickle, but the fame of Nast is enduring. The boldness, directiness and meaning of his cartoons remain overwhelming. This is all the more apparent when one turns to Harper's and looks at Nast's work, especially the double-page cartoons. It then becomes obvious that his work remains practically unparalleled in the history of American political cartooning.

Nast, who lived and worked in "Villa Fontana" between 1873 and 1902, loved and enjoyed his home immensely. Friend of numerous prominent people, Nast welcomed, among others, Ulysses S. Grant and Mark Twain. Those distinguished quests left indelible impressions upon their host: Grant because of his powerful cigars and Twain because he stopped all the clocks in the house in order to be able to sleep. It was a bitter blow to the artist when adverse financial circumstances forced him to accept a consularship in Ecuador in 1902 and he had to leave his beloved home. He never saw Villa Fontana again, as he died shortly after arriving in South America.
