Today U.S. 85 and the railroad pass between Wagon Mound and the Pilot Knobs, slightly to the west, just as the old trail did. South of Wagon Mound extensive remains show the route of the trail toward La Junta (Watrous), and the westerly swing of the alternate to Fort Union is also plainly visible. The town of Wagon Mound (formerly the Mexican settlement of Santa Clara) hugs the base of the mountain. But from only a few miles to the northeast, Wagon Mound appears to rise alone and untrammeled from the plain, still a landmark. Santa Clara Spring--2 miles northeast of the town on State Route 120, then one-half mile north by ranch road--is utilized for the municipal water supply. It is covered with a tin-roofed, concrete shelter. But this intrusion os softened by overhanging willows and cottonwoods, and the spring site retains much integrity.

Boundaries:

The landmark consists of two parcels; the first encloses the Santa Clara canyon and the second encloses Wagon Mound. The boundary lines have been drawn to encompass the natural features of the landmark and exclude non-historic intrusions. Parcel#1. Preceding west out of Wagon Mound on State Route 120, the boundary begins at the point of intersection of the northern curb of Route 120 and the 6200' contour The boundary proceeds north and west along the 6200' contour to a point due west of Dead Cottonwood Spring to the 6400' contour which it then follows west, then south around Santa Clara canyon, to the intersection of the 6400' contour with the northern curb of Route 120. At this point the boundary follows the northern curb east to the point of origin.

Parcel #2: The boundary line follows the 6400 contour completely around Wagon Mound.

ward journey across the plains of northeastern New Mexico It first becomes visible near Point of Rocks, and from the Rock Crossing it was the guidepoint for the caravans. Early travelers likened the mountain to a shoe with the toe pointed westward, but soon a trader had an inspired vision and saw in the humped—up hill a wagon bearing southwest with its yokes of oxen lumbering over the horizon. The name he gave it, Wagon Mound, stuck. And a more appropriate simile for the Santa Fe Trail would be hard to find.

Two miles northwest of Wagon Mound is Santa Clara Spring, up a canyon by the same name. Here the traders camped in a natural bowl, sheltered from the winds that unceasingly whip across the open plains. Beginning in the late 1840's Santa Clara Spring was the scene of frequent Indian ambuscades, most famous of which was the Mail Train Massacre of May 1850. Wagon Mound became not only a guide but a warning sign.

History:

Wagon Mound served as the westernmost landmark of the Cimarron Cutoff, on the northeastern plains of New Mexico. The Cutoff, was first opened in 1822 by Captain William Becknell in his second trading venture to Santa Fe. The route dropped from the Arkansas River near the later site of Fort Mann, across Kansas and Oklahoma, through the Cimarron Desert and the plains of New Mexico, and rejoined with the Mountain Branch, which passed over Raton Pass to the north, at La Junta de Rios Mora y Sapello. After 1822, the Cutoff became the main route of the Santa Fe Trail, as it was 100 miles shorter than the Mountain Branch, and it avoided the ordeal of crossing Raton Pass. Nontheless, this route held its own perils, including the bareen Cimarron Desert and the ever present danger of Indian attack, for between the Arkansas crossing and the New Mexican frontier lay Comanche territory. It was discovered by the 1830's that the best protection against Indian raids was to travel in large trains, rather than in small parties with armed escorts.

During the War with Mexico, the Army of the West, and the traders who traveled under its protection, used the Mountain Branch, by virtue of its abundance of water and proximity to a base of operations, Bent's Fort, Colorado, After the war however, commercial freighting on the Cimarron Cutoff resumed as never before.

In 1850, Wagon Mound, which with its springs and protected camping ground was a favored rest stop, became the scene of a tragic ambush.

In 1851, Fort Union was established, 20 miles southwest of Wagon Mound. A major road to the fort branched from the Cimarron Cutoff at Wagon Mound skirted the north edge of the Turkey Mountains, then joined the Mountain Branch near Turkey Rock. Military freighters made heavy use of this alternate route.

With the outbreak of the Civil War, the Cimarron Cutoff was virtually abandoned by the military freighters who constituted the bulk of the traffic on the Trail. The Cutoff proved too vulnerable against Confederate raiders and Indians who took advantage of the white man's internicene strife.

Traffic resumed after the war, but by 1879, the advancing rail-head from Kansas had bypassed the Cutoff point, and wagon traffic on the Cutoff virtually ceased.
