STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Thomas Sully (1783-1872) was during his lifetime one of the best known American portrait painters, producing the astonishing total of 2,600 works. Born in England, he arrived in South Carolina with his parents in 1792. For four years he studied under his brother Lawrence, a miniature and device painter, until Lawrence's death in 1803. In 1805, Sully moved to New York City, where he successfully filled many commissions, and in 1808 he moved to Philadelphia where he lived the rest of his life, excepting two trips to England, the second in 1838 when he produced a celebrated portrait of Queen Victoria. The three-and-a half story brick rowhouse at 530 Spruce Street was one of Sully's many homes in the sixty-four years he lived in Philadelphia; the Philadelphia Directory recorded his residence there in its 1828-1829 edition. It is today a private home.

History

Born at Horncastle, Lincolnshire in 1783, the fourth child of Matthew and Sara Sully, actors, Thomas Sully emigrated with his family to Charleston, South Carolina, in 1792. After an abortive service in an insurance brokerage, Sully began to study art under M. Belzons, his brother-in-law, but around 1799, he broke with his brother-in-law and moved to Richmond, Virginia, to live as his brother Lawrence's pupil. Sully lived and worked with his brother, a miniature and device painter, in both Richmond and Norfolk, until his brother's death in 1803. In 1805, Thomas married his brother's widow who bore him six daughters and three sons. In 1806, the advice of Thomas Abthorpe Cooper, the distinguished actor, Sully moved to New York City, where, introduced to his patron's wide circle of friends, he received and filled many commissions. In 1808, Sully moved to Philadelphia, which was to remain his home. In 1809, he sailed to London, where he visited Benjamin West, and Sir Thomas Lawrence, and upon their introductions painted various of their friends. In 1810 he returned to Philadelphia, where he firmly established his reputation as a "History and Portrait Painter".¹ In 1824-5 Sully painted Lafayette during his farewell visit, and after Charles Willson Peale's death in 1827, and Gilbert Stuart's death in 1828, Sully was virtually the paramount portrait painter in the country. Sully made a second trip to England in 1838 when he painted Queen Victoria on commission from the Society of the Sons of St. George in Philadelphia. He also painted many other distinguished Englishmen, and was very well received. For the rest of his career Sully
