DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Located at the southeast corner of Bolvin and Water Streets on St. Feriole Island, the old fur warehouse is a two-story, rectangular, gable-roofed building, built c. 1828 by Joseph Rolette on the site of an earlier log structure. It is a sturdy structure, little altered since its days as a warehouse, and now restored and converted to museum use.

Many of the earliest structures in Prairie du Chien, especially commercial buildings were located on St. Feriole Island, close to and oriented toward, the Mississippi River whose east channel passes the island on the west. Early 19th century illustrations of the town show a whole cluster of structures on the island lining the banks of the river. The site of an early British tavern, later used as Indian agency is just north of the warehouse, across Bolvin Street, on the edge of Villa Louis property. Immediately south is the Brisbois House, then the site of the very large 1805 North West Fur Company warehouse, the offices of the American Fur Company, the Rolette House, the Dousman Hotel etc.

Apparently there were previous structures on this site. One reference states that a wooden building of the American Factory System on that site was remodeled in the second decade of the 19th century. An October 1829 drawing of Fort Crawford and neighboring buildings shows a structure on this site, but it appears to have a somewhat different shape and orientation than the present building, unless it was remodeled.<sup>9</sup> The State survey of historic structures and the WPA guide to Wisconsin both date the building as 1835. However, Mr. Don Munson, Curator of the Astor Warehouse, reported that c. 1781-1827 a large log structure was located at this site until it burned, and that c. 1828 a fur warehouse for the American Fur Company was built by chief agent Joseph Rolette there.<sup>10</sup>

The building is constructed of native stone with corner quoins. The longer stones of the quoins protrude beyond the corner at the rear of the building. A thin watercourse runs along the base of the first story. The front (west) first story facade is composed of three slightly recessed bays of tall windows. These are framed by a wide wooden beam between and above the windows, "possibly once a wooden approximation of a pilastered Greek Rivival storefront treatment."<sup>11</sup>

Three flat arched windows light the second-story front, with three similar windows on the second-story rear. A wooden ramp leads to a tall, wide door in the center of the first-story rear, and there is an entrance to the basement near the foundation line at the north end of the rear wall. On the north side of the warehouse there is a second-story entrance with a small open platform, flanked by two windows. There are no windows on the first story level of the north side, and none at all on the south side of the building.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Built c. 1828 and used until mid-century, this stone building in Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, is the only known original fur trade warehouse surviving in the Upper Mississippi Valley. As first agent of the American Fur Company in Prairie du Chien, Joseph Rolette built this structure for use by that company c. 1828, on St. Feriole Island, on the banks of the Mississippi River. In 1842 he rented it to the new American Fur Company and they used it for fur storage for about a decade. The offices of the American Fur Company were located just down the street, to the south.<sup>1</sup>

History

Situated only a short distance north of the confluence of the Mississippi and Wisconsin Rivers, Prairie du Chien was a natural trading and settlement site. Indian occupation of Prairie du Chien area long precedes fur trading activity between Indians and white fur trade companies there. What is perhaps the largest Indian mound in Wisconsin, believed to be a Hopewell mound from the first millenium A.D., on St. Feriole Island, has also been the site of several forts and houses, as well as a succession of Indian camps. The Fox Indians are known to have had a village in that area in the 18th century, described in documents as early as 1732.

The first well-documented trading post was established in Prairie du Chien in 1871, but French traders and families may well have settled permanently there by 1761. Before 1800 Prairie du Chien was the only other real settlement in Wisconsin besides Green Bay. Prairie du Chien, and especially St. Feriole Island, had long been a major fur trading rendezvous each spring through late fall, for tribes from all sections of the Mississippi and Wisconsin, with Spanish, French, British and American traders.<sup>2</sup> Local tradition has it that in 1737 the French abandoned Fort Beauharnois to the north and established a trading post and fort at Prairie du Chien. Another yet undocumented story is that Nicholas Perrot, one of the first fur traders in the Upper Mississippi, erected Fort St. Nicholas in this vicinity in 1685 (possible site south of town).

Michael Brisbois, prominent early fur trader came to Prairie du Chien from Canada in 1781, and is recognized as one of the first white fur traders to settle there permanently. He is believed to have long been a secret operative of the Hudson's Bay

The interior is basically one room, and probably the two stories and basement level were all used for fur storage. The basement still displays old stringers with their fitted support pillars. The hoist system used to move materials between the three levels is near the east end of the building--a pulley attached to the roof beams which hoisted materials through holes in the floors on both levels.

In 1972 the two phase restoration project of the fur warehouse was completed (partially funded with a National Park Service grant). The project included restoration of the exterior of the building and conversion of the interior for use as a museum of the fur trade and history of the Upper Mississippi Valley. The second phase included installation of electrical service and interior circuits, heating and ventilating, interior stairs, interior wall finish to prepare the building for public use as a museum and to meet safety code requirements.

The museum was first opened for the spring and summer season of 1976.

Company, well into the second quarter of the 19th century. The North West Fur Company, founded in Montreal in 1783, established posts, or "factories" on the headwaters of the Mississippi in 1806. A small one-story stone building on N. Beaumont Street, near the corner of Blackhawk Avenue, dated c. 1808, was the North West Fur Company's offices and auxiliary warehouse in Prairie du Chien.<sup>3</sup> The North West Company's very large warehouse, built in 1805 on the riverfront on the west side of St. Feriole Island, was razed c. 1910.

An 1816 law to regulate activity with the Indians excluded foreign traders from the large fur trade market of the Louisiana Territory, which the British and French Canadians had long dominated. The American Fur Company, founded by John Jacob Astor in 1808 to compete with the large Canadian firms--the Hudson's Bay Company and the North West Fur Company--had been nearly destroyed by the War of 1812. However, in 1817, after the passage of this law, Astor's company seized their opportunity. They tightened control over the northeastern trapping areas of the Upper Mississippi, where they already had a foothold, establishing an important permanent post in Prairie du Chien in 1817.

The American Fur Company and its subsidiaries also quickly "threw agents into the remotest corners of the Louisiana Purchase."<sup>4</sup> Astor's firm soon exercised a virtual monopoly on the fur trade in the U.S. territories, and in fact is recognized as the first American business monopoly. The Pacific Fur Company, and the Pacific North West Company were two major subsidiaries in the west, and early operations around the Great Lakes were under another subsidiary, the South West Company, in which Canadian merchants also participated.

In 1821 an alliance with the company of Pierre Chouteau of St. Louis established the Western Department of the American Fur Company and began their entrance into the Missouri River trade and eventually into the Rocky Mountains. The company guaranteed its monopoly by ruthlessly crushing and buying out all competitors, and triumphed over competition in the central Rockies in the 1830's.<sup>5</sup>

John Jacob Astor himself retired in 1834 and the company split into divisions under the direction of Ramsey Crooks, Pierre Chouteau, Jr. and Kenneth McKenzie. The American Fur Company continued Astor's policies, and remained powerful and a very significant influence on the frontier for several more decades.<sup>6</sup> Prairie du Chien operations were part of the division under Ramsey Crooks, and officially retained the name American Fur Company, which was commonly used for several successive companies also. In 1842 a new American Fur Company was organized under the partnership of Hercules Dousman I, Joseph Rolette and H. H. Sibley.<sup>7</sup>

Fur trading continued profitable in Prairie du Chien until the 1860's, although the great days of the town as a fur mart were over by 1840. The years before 1840 were profitable for the American Fur Company in Prairie du Chien. After British traders were forbidden to operate in the Northwest Territory in 1816, the American Fur Company's remaining competitor, the American Factory system, was removed in 1822. By 1834, at Astor's retirement, the American Fur Company controlled most of the fur trade in the Northwest Territory. But in the 1840's the fur trade began to decline and by mid-century was an almost negligible factor in Prairie du Chien's economy.<sup>8</sup>

During the second half of the 19th century the old American Fur Warehouse was used periodically as both a store and a warehouse. C. 1900 it was converted to a machine shop. The second story was sometimes a residence. The Astor Fur Warehouse, restored and open as a museum of fur trade history as of Spring 1976, was associated with fur trade activities of the major American companies in Prairie du Chien for about twentyfive years.
