DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Augustus Lutheran Church is a plain sandstone structure with a polygonal apse and gambrel roof. The building has undergone several renewals since its erection in 1743. Five new roofs have been put on since 1814, the most recent one being done in 1974. In 1814 plaster was put on the sandstone walls which were eroding. At this time the interior was painted in a style typical for German or Pennsylvania Dutch in the manner common in Germany. There is an asymmetrical placement of windows on the side which is in keeping with the older building tradition of vernacular architecture, unconcerned with Georgian formality.

In 1968 efforts were made to remove the plaster and find an alternative method of preservation, but all of these proved unsatisfactory. Only the cornerstone has been left uncovered. All the window sash and frames were replaced in 1968.

Very few changes have been made on the interior as well. There are galleries on three sides, two of which date from 1743. The northeast loft was built in 1752 for the new organ imported from Europe, parts of which can still be seen in the church. The imposing paneled walnut pulpit, which serves as the focal point of the interior, was received in 1745 as a gift from English church members.

All of the pews are original. Those beneath the organ loft were for the elders; those beneath the western gallery, with carved doors and elaborate locks were for the wealthier members of the congregation. As was customary in the colonial period, the sexes were separated. Here, the women sat on the northeast side and the men opposite. Servants and boys used plain high backed benches in the gallery.

In 1928, the building underwent a major restoration. At this time, wooden floorboards were removed from over the original flagstone and old stoves were taken out. The interior paint was restored to the 1814 design, with a section of one pillar left exposed to reveal the sources for the restoration. At this time the balaustrade, carved with its heartshapes, was painted light blue and the pillars were decorated with a wavy black and white pattern.

BOUNDARIES

AugustusLutheran Church is located on a large area of land owned by the church for use as a cemetery. The boundary is drawn to include the original cemetery property indicated by the old sandstone wall along 7th Street and to exclude the new church buildings; beginning at the northeast corner of the wall and continuing along 7th Street in a straight line until it intersects with the wall along main street at the southeast corner, then along Main Street, past the old gate to the beginning of the path to the new church at the southwest corner, then along the path on the east side, following it around the new church to its east side and continuing in a straight line until reaching a point directly in line with the (continued)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Augustus Lutheran Church, located in Trappe Pennsylvania, exemplifies early German rural construction in this country and as such, serves as an excellent example of the regional type of church built in the early Pennsylvania German manner. The exterior walls, originally of local sandstone, have been plastered and the gambrel roof of wooden shingles has undergone several needed renewals, but the integrity of the structure is incredibly intact. Original hand hewn timbers, hand-forged nails, and hinges and door latches, the 1745 pulpit, the 1795 altar, and original pews, some with carved wooden doors and elaborately forged hinges, are still in place. Another interesting Pennsylvania German feature is the church's cut-out gallery railing with heart-shaped figures. Augustus Lutheran Church remains today one of the best examples of the vernacular architecture of America's German settlement with a high degree of integrity that is relatively undisturbed by the later church buildings.

HISTORY

Augustus Lutheran Church is the oldest extant Lutheran church building in the United States. It was built by Dr. Heinrich Melchior Muhlenburg, one of four Pietists who were pioneers in the religious life of America. Work on the building began in 1743, the year after his arrival. The building was dedicated in September, 1745 and services were held regularly for more than a century. In 1852 a new, larger church was built, but the old building is still used for summer services.
