STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Eleazer Arnold House, Lincoln Rhode Island was built in 1687 and survives today as a fine example of a stone-ender house. Rhode Island, unlike Massachusetts and Connecticut, had a plentiful supply of building stone and lime for mortar. This resulted in a local form of domestic structure termed a "stone-ender", created from the method of enlargement. Starting with a one-room house with an end fireplace, the first addition was commonly a rear lean-to instead of another room at the opposite side of the chimney. Its fireplace was built beside that of the hall, and the combined chimneys of the two were so wide that they virtually covered the whole end of the house. The Arnold House is one of the finest existing examples of such a stone ender.

The house remained in the possession of the Arnold family until it was acquired by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. In has undergone restoration and is opened as a house museum.
