STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Charles Evans Hughes was a statesman and juror of the highest order, a leader in the Progressive movement, and the holder of a succession of important offices from the administration of William Howard Taft to the New Deal. His biographer, Merlo Pusey, has called him "one of the great minds of the century."¹ When first appointed in 1910 to the Supreme Court, of which he later became Chief Justice, Hughes took his place alongside Oliver Wendell Holmes as one of the conservative body's two distinguished dissidents, exercising a powerful voice in progressive reform and as an early champion of civil rights and racial equality. A man of "integrity, independence, great power of leadership, and, above all, intellectual depth,"² as Arthur Link has hailed him, Hughes was for forty years a dynamic force and a dominant figure in American politics.

Although a native of New York, Hughes made Washington his permanent home. He and Mrs. Hughes purchased the commodious R Street residence, next door to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Francis Adams, in 1930, when he returned to the city as Chief Justice. For the rest of their lives-longer than they had lived anywhere else, the Hughes resided here, maintaining the order and efficiency that had always characterized their daily existence. As at his earlier Washington home, Hughes maintained a study on the first floor. "From these modest quarters," writes Pusey, "the Supreme Court was to be directed for eleven years."³ Now occupied by the Ambassador of Burma, the dwelling is outwardly unchanged.

Biography

Great intellect was unified with high idealism, humanity, and rare integrity in the life of Charles Evans Hughes. This dedication of singular talents to lofty purpose was perhaps the legacy of his pietistic background, for, born in 1862, he was the son of a gifted clergyman who was then pastor of the Baptist flock at Glens Falls, New York. The family moved a number of times during Hughes' childhood, as his father's prominence increased, and eventually they settled in New York City. Hughes attended formal school only intermittently, but his quick intelligence and the warm home life he enjoyed put him far ahead of most children of his age. At thirteen, he finished high school in Manhattan. The next year, he entered Madison (now Colgate) University, then went to Brown, where he received his degree in 1881. Graduating with honors from Columbia Law School two years later, Hughes was admitted to the New York bar. He then practiced law until 1906, except for a two-year interval as a professor of jurisprudence at Cornell.

Hughes first entered the public arena in 1905, as counsel for the Stevens committee investigation of the gas and electricity industries. This was followed by an astounding probe of the insurance industry. His exposés of corruption in these citadels of big business thrust him into prominence as a likely candidate for the governorship, and with the support of President Theodore Roosevelt, he became the Republican candidate in 1906. He was elected, and in 1908 was returned to office for a second term. The Hughes administration, comparable to that of Woodrow Wilson in neighboring New Jersey, or of Robert M. LaFollette in Wisconsin, was a model of progressive achievement. Among his accomplishments were new regulation of public service agencies, administrative reforms, and labor and welfare legislation.

In 1910, Hughes was appointed by President Taft to the Supreme Court, where he became a champion of civil rights as well as railroad regulation. His name was often mentioned in connection with the presidency, but with determination he declined until 1916, when he was drafted by the Republican Party. The Progresssive Party, too, endorsed him. But the truculent nationalism expressed by such prominent supporters as Theodore Roosevelt proved detrimental to the Hughes campaign. Furthermore, he was unable to define a position very different from Wilson's. In November, he narrowly lost the election. After his defeat, Hughes again entered private practice in New York, interrupted for a time by war work in Washington undertaken at the behest of his former presidential opponent.

The Republican Party called upon him once more when it returned to power in 1920. As Secretary of State under President Harding, Hughes was untouched by the scandals which rocked that administration. Amid a national mood of isolationism and mediocrity, he worked with laudable dedication. He advocated American entry into the League of Nations and the signing of the Versailles Treaty. Failing in this, he arranged for separate treaties with the enemy countries. He was the instigator of the Washington Conference of 1921-22 which, despite its long-range inefficacy, resulted in a reduction of the raval armament race between the U.S., Britain, and Japan. He also re-negotiated the reparations agreements with Germany, and attempted to get the United States into the World Court.

Hughes became involved in various public services after his tenure as Secretary of State, and resumed legal practice until 1930, when he was appointed Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. During the New Deal, he occupied a position between the extreme conservatives and the liberals on the court, but he strongly opposed Roosevelt's court-packing scheme plan in 1937. Four years later, he retired, and in the summer of 1948, he died while at Cape Cod, Massachusetts.

In tribute to his great friend, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, Hughes had once written, "The most beautiful and the rarest thing in the world is a complete human life, unmarred, unified by intelligent purpose and uninterrupted accomplishment, blessed by great talent employed in the worthiest activities."⁴ The words could well be applied to Hughes' own life and vision, as a statesman who left a lasting impression on American life.
