The U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home is the product of a quartercentury of effort by prominent military and political figures to secure legislation which would relieve the situation of old and disabled soldiers. The military asylum was the first attempt to provide for members of the regular army who had served during peacetime and had been disabled or retired from public service. The Washington, D.C. home is the only such Army institution in the Nation and the sole remaining of the original three asylums established in 1851.

The history of the establishment of the home significantly indicates the needs of the military personnel felt during this period, and reflects the awareness of the responsibility felt by Government and military leaders for the old and disabled soldiers.

History

Secretary of War James Barbour first officially recommended to Congress the propriety of founding an asylum for old and disabled soldiers November 27, 1827, in his Annual Message to the President. Such a plan was already in use by the Navy and other nations. He illustrated the need for Government action by the cases that the War Department even then was called upon to relieve. His suggestion was the first in a 25-year struggle to establish a military asylum during which proposals were constantly being made and shelved.

Between 1790 and 1861 the size and organization of the Regular Army changed almost yearly. During this time the Army engaged in two major and 23 lesser wars. Injury and disease took a terrible toll so that a great proportion of the veterans were discharged diseased or disabled, with no means of support. Totally disabled veterans of the Revolutionay War received $5 per month and those of the War of 1812 received half-pay. However, soldiers of the Regular Army, injured or retired during peacetime, were left to shift for themselves.

8. Significance (page 1) U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home

In 1833 Lewis Cass, Secretary of War, presented the case for the superannuated soldiers in a letter to President Jackson:

"In our service as is presently organized, a soldier can be retained only as long as his physical powers are sufficient to enable him to perform the duties required of him. When his constitution fails, unless it is the result of disabilities incurred in the line of his duty, he is discharged without any provision for his support, and generally, from the habits of his life, without the disposition and too often the power to labor and without the means of support. He is then thrown on charity of the community after devoting the best of his life to the service of his country."

Winfield Scott sparked the actual establishment of the home by earmarking Mexican tribute money for the fund of the still non-existent asylum. Upon the capture of Mexico City, Scott levied a tribute of $150,000 on that city in lieu of pillage. Of this sum Scott deposited a check for $100,000 and endorsed it "The Bank of America, New York City, will place the within amount to the credit of the Army Asylum, subject to order of Congress." Scott has always been considered the Father of the home, since he was personally interested in the project and was instrumental in its establishment and growth by virtue of his position as Chief of the Army, and, consequently, Chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the Asylum.

Spurred by Senator Jefferson Davis, Congress, on March 3, 1851, finally passed the bill founding "a military asylum for the relief and support of invalid and disabled soldiers of the Army of the U.S." President Fillmore signed it into law the same day. The legislation of 1851 authorized three asylum sites, one in D.C., and branch sites in New Orleans, Louisiana, and East Pascagoula, Mississippi, and later one at Harrodsburg, Kentucky. All these branches closed prior to 1860.

The present Washington home opened December 24, 1851, in a building on 17th Street, N.W., while the committee considered local sites for the permanent asylum. They purchased the George Riggs estate of 256 acres in 1851 and in June moved the first members to the Riggs House, the Anderson Cottage. The members moved to the Main Building, now Sherman South, in 1857 when that structure was finished. By 1857 the Governor and Deputy Governor occupied their new residences also.

U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home

General Scott, in 1857, invited President Buchanan and Secretary of War Floyd to take up summer residence at the asylum, which was then a country estate outside of swampy downtown Washington. Buchanan resided there for the summers of 1857-60. President Lincoln and his family occupied the Riggs House from mid-summer to November 1862-64. President Hayes stayed at the home during the summers of 1877-80 and President Arthur 1882-84.

President Lincoln stayed in the cottage during the battle of Fort Stepens, only 2 miles to the north. He recorded that while staying at the home he wrote the second draft of the Emancipation Proclamation:

"I put the draft of the Proclamation aside, waiting for a victory. Well the next news we had was of Pope's disaster at Bull Run. Things looked darker than ever. Finally came the week of the Battle of Antietam. I determined to wait no longer. The news came, I think, on Wednesday that the advantage was on our side. I was then staying at the Soldiers' Home. Here I finished writing the second draft of the Proclamation; came up on Saturday, called the cabinet together to hear it, and it was published the following Monday. I made a solemn vow before God that if General Lee was driven back from Maryland I would crown the result by the declaration for freedom to the slaves.

Since 1851 the U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home has been in continuous operation, providing room, board, clothing, medical care, laundry and extensive recreation facilities freely to any 20-year veteran or disabled soldier who had contributed from his monthly pay. By December 27, 1859, there were 127 members living at the asylum and today it is the home of 2,700 men and women.
