

1. American convoy at anchor in Kuluk Bay, Adak, assembling for the invasion of Japanese-held Kiska Island. ca. August, 1943.

Courtesy, National Archives

2. A portion of the vast encampment established on Adak for the bombing and invasion of the Japanese-held islands of Kiska and Attu in the Aleutians. The army airfield lies beyond the hangar. 1943.

Courtesy, Elmendorf Air Force Base, Alaska

3. Two of three immense army reserve depot warehouses at Sweeper Cove, Adak, built in 1943-44 for a possible invasion of Japan's Home Islands from the north.

Photo by E.N. Thompson. August, 1983

6. Zeto Point, Adak. Ruins of World War II joint harbor entrance control post, gun emplacements, and quonset huts may still be found on this cape, north of Kuluk Bay. This area is severely restricted today because of classified installations.

Photo by E.N. Thompson. August, 1983

8. Deteriorated aircraft hangar at the World War II naval air station on Adak--one of only two structures still standing at the former station. This general area today is the site of several classified installations.

Photo by E.N. Thompson. August, 1983

9. Andrew Lake was a part of the World War II naval air station on Adak. It was used by naval flying boats and seaplanes. The boat house dates from the war and is still used by the Navy for recreational boating purposes.

Photo by E.N. Thompson. August, 1983

ADAK

ZETO POINT

Standing in the cut for the HECF and looking up.

848F

Johnson

Aug 82

ADAK QVONSETS AT ZETO POINT

(Looking inland from the point)

#18

848F

Shannon

Aug 83

ADAK
ZERO POINT
Standing in the cut which housed the H.E.C.P.

848E

J. J. J.

Aug 82

ADAK

QUONSETS AT ZETO POINT

(Landward side of the point)

848F

Thompson

Aug 83

ADAK

ZETO POINT

Looking down into the cut where the HECP stood.

848F

Thompson

Aug 83

Adak

Sweeper Cove Warehouse - close-up of siding

ca. winter '85-'86

Adak -
anti-submarine net, Finger Bay
ca. winter '85-'86

Adak

Mt. Moffett. Quonset hut with bay window addition

ca. winter '85-'86