The appearance of the fort has changed somewhat through the years through natural deteriorations. Many original features of the fort, including the most, fraising, palisade, and gateway, are no longer existant.

The fort is about 200 feet square, although the bastions protrude out approximately 40 feet from each corner. The earthworks of the fort are generally 10 feet in height, although they are nearly 20 feet high near the easternmost bastion. A large garrison cannon, located in front of the fort is the only armament remaining within the fort grounds.

The two powder magazines have been completely restored, as well as the southernmost bastion. This restoration work was just recently completed. In the planning stage now is a replica of the officer's barracks.

The history of the fort is depicted by several interpretive panels found on the grounds.

While we do not know if the Norsemen were here at Castine nearly a thousand years ago, records show that the Cabots sailed by here for England in 1497. Since then, because it commanded the approach to the Penobscot River, history has been colorful and complex.

In these parts were many well known adventurers and explorers. For the French, Jacques Cartier, Samuel Champlain, Sieur deMonts, Father Biard, and Mons. Vincent de St. Castine or Baron St. Castin, for whom the town was named. For the English, Capt. George Weymouth, Capt. John Smith, Isaac Allerton and Miles Standish of Plimouth Plantation. The Dutch were here twice and the Spanish once.

We are not certain whether the first fortification in Castine, about 1626, was built by the French or the Pilgrims, but we do know that the present Fort George was built by the British to both protect their interests in the Bay of Fundy and Nova Scotia by sea, and prevent land action against lower Canada.

On June 17, 1779 British General McLean and Capt. Mowatt of the Royal Navy arrived with 750 land forces and three sloops of war. This site was selected and work begun on the fort. Since this cut off the Boston merchants from one of their best sources of lumber, the Massachusetts General Court demanded action. It was July 24th before Commodore Saltonstall and General Lovell reached Castine. This was the largest amphibious expedition of the American Revolution, consisting of 37 ships mounting 328 guns and 2000 men.

The Colonists were far too cautious. Saltonstall, with his 37 ships, refused to attack the 3 British ships. It was August 14th before an all-out attack was initiated and it was barely under way when 6 British sails were sighted. These sailed for the center of the Massachusetts fleet and Commodore Saltonstall called the attacking land forces back on board and sailed up the Penobscot to complete annihilation, and a cost to the Massachusetts treasury of $8,469,780.05. This virtually marked the end of the Continental Navy.

Second in command of the land forces was General Peleg Wadsworth, grandfather of one of Maine's best loved poets, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. Later in the war General Wadsworth was captured and imprisoned here but escaped by way of Wadsworth Cove.

After the end of the American Revolution this was the last fortification that the British evacuated.

For the War of 1812 Maine was called upon for 2,500 militia and troops were stationed at most large coastal towns. On August 26, 1813, the British took the init= iative and left Halifax with 3,500 men for a campaign against Maine. They took possession of what is now Maine east of the Penobscot River. At Castine they repaired Fort George, garrisoned it and mounted 60 cannon, and went up the river as far as Bangor. A canal, still visible, was dug across the neck.

Castine, for the British Army and Naval officers, became a gay and colorful resort. Trade flourished, lumber was exchanged for European fineries and taxes collected were used to endow Dalhousie College in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

On Christmas Eve, 1814, peace was effected by the Treaty of Ghent but it was February 11th, 1815 before the news reached Castine, and April 25th before the British blew up the fort and left.

About 1940, former Governor Baxter asked the State Park Commission if it would be interested in acquiring Fort George and Battery Gosselin, by will from one of his clients. Thus it was that Miss Amy Witherle, member of an old Castine family, enabled the State to acquire this historic site.

In 1961 the 100th Maine Legislature provided funds for archeological and historical research.
