Practically every detail of the church is original and in good condition at present. Therefore, a description of today's structure will very closely describe the original appearance of the church.

The church is rectangular in plan form and lies on an east west axis. The plan is symmetrical with the exception of the bell tower on the north side, next to the entry (narthex). Essentially, there is one large room, the nave, with a smaller volume on either end. To the east of the nave is the narthex (approximately 7'x14'); to the west of the nave lies the apse and smaller spaces for rear entry and ceremony preparation.

Four large windows (double hung) with the original stained glass flank each side of the nave. An exposed wood truss system and the roof rafters can be seen from the interior. Eighteen inch thick walls of plastered adobe brick rise from rock and concrete foundations to the roof structure. There is no buttressing of the walls.

In the interior, original pews still serve the congregation as does the original organ. Lamps suspended from the trusses originated from sailing vessels but are now electrified. The floors are of wood.

The only outstanding feature of recent years is the new bell tower which is built of brick. This brick structure replaces the original of adobe and frame construction.

The roof is a steep pitched saddle or "A" roof which is in keeping with the Gothic Revival style of the building's exterior and interior.

The townspeople, contrary to popular opinion, were not all desperadoes who held gunfights at the OK Corral. Indeed, Tombstone had acquired a very cosmopolitan, or at least, metropolitan air when it was in its heyday. There were theatres, both "legitimate" and otherwise and there were several restaurants known for their cuisine. There were also churches and people who supported them. Before the St. Paul's Episcopal Church had been built, the congregation had met where they could; including the old and new county courthouses. By 1882, a new church structure was being built, St. Paul's, under the auspices of the Arizona-New Mexico Episcopal Diocese and one Reverend Talbot. Talbot organized the building program but left after only three months. He was replaced by Endicott Peabody, and it was under his leadership that the church was completed in June of 1882.

Peabody left the following year to return to Massachusetts. Soon afterwards, Peabody was to found the educational institution, the Groton School for Girls.

The Church still stands and continues to serve an Episcopal congregation. Much of the church's original furnishings are still in use, and the building itself is in excellent condition.

The original cost of the relatively small church (25'x70') was $5,000.

The Church is within a registered National Landwark, Tombstone Historic District.
