The Benjamin Church house, built by Church, a carpenter, in 1843, is a somewhat diminutive Temple style Greek Revival structure. It is a one-story, five-room frame house with an attic. Seriatim, front to rear in the main house, are living room, dining room and kitchen. The front door opens directly into the living room. Symmetrically flanking the living and dining rooms is a small bedroom wing on each side. A stairway leads from the kitchen to the attic.

At the front is a Doric tetraprostyle portico with fluted columns which support the entablature. There is no pediment as the portico extension of the main house roof is hipped. The flanking wings also have hipped roofs. The rear is a gable end, however, with pilasters at the corners to support the cornice returns. Between the study there is brick nogging.

The house was moved in 1939 from its original location to avoid demolition, placed in Estabrook Park, restored, and opened to the public as a museum. The move was a cooperative effort on the part of the Wisconsin Society of Colonial Dames, the Milwaukee County Historical Society, and the Milwaukee County Park Commission. The Colonial Dames undertook the task of furnishing the house appropriately for its period and have continued their interest as custodians. In late 1970 a fire caused internal damage amounting to about $12,000, with most of the loss confined to the furnishings and minimal damage to the interior structure of the house itself. Repair and restoration of the interior have been in progress during the summer of 1971 and should be completed by late autumn. Concurrently the Colonial Dames are preparing to refurnish the house.

The house is sided with clapboards. The front opening is a plain framed single door with a single vertical panel. The two front windows, one on either side of the door, are plain framed, 6-paned double hung sash. On the side of each wing toward the front of the house is a single, simple, small window which matches the main front windows. Windows on the sides and downstairs rear are single-paned double hung sash, but there is a pair of six-paned double sash windows at the rear of the main house at attic level, quite small in size.

At the time when the Church house was measured for the Historic American Buildings Survey in 1936, the delineator noted on his drawings that there had been numerous additions to the house over the years that were not in harmony with the original house, and drew detailed plans only of the original parts of the building. When the house was restored after being moved to its permanent location in Estabrook Park, these additions were removed and the house returned to its original state. It is thus a faithful restoration in which the original charm of this early Milwaukee Greek Revival house
