In (1832) Neal paid a city building tax on his new brick house valued at sight angles to Deer Street survives completely as James Neal left it upon his death in 1833. The exterior is among the last of the Federal Style brick houses built after the Portsmouth fire of 1813. A fan-lighted doorway on the western facade opens upon a central hallway containing a broad circular stairway of vernacular regency design. On either side of the central stairway is a single room, although a narrow hallway exists behind the staircase and southern room. A two-story brick south entry which connects the main house and a two story brick kitchen ell which may originally have been linked through the rear hallway as well. Interior finish, in a transitional vernacular of late Federal and emerging Greek Revival, exists in each of the major rooms. Such a room in the main block contains a fireplace with its original mattle and surrounding detail. The sash and fenestra- tion are original and unaltered throughout.		Excellent 🕅 Good	-	-	- Puine
