7. DESCRIPTION (Check One) Good X Deteriorated Fair Ruins Unexposed Excellent CONDITION (Check One) (Check One) 🐼 Original Site X Altered Unaltered Moved DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE The architect of the Masonic Temple was Charles L. Carson of the firm of Dixon and Carson of Baltimore. Carson designed a Second Empire style building which closely follows the European models then popular. The entire facade is of cast iron, secured to a structural steel framework. Almost all the cast iron remains intact. Only the columns on the first floor are covered by modern store fronts. Originally all the iron facade was painted a light cream(almost white) and was lighted by gas lamps. The fourth floor was capped by a slate mansard roof, which has since been oversimplified by renovations. The bronzed and gilded iron crestings were removed, along with a raised contral cupola and flagpole. 1 RECEIVET Inside the 92' by 211' four-story structure Us 13 theater which originally contained 1,418 seats, including aproboxeş, a dress circle, a parquet circle and a gallery. still intact except for the orchestra pit, is 37' deep and 75' wide backstage. The proscenium opening is 40' wide and 26' high. In 1871 it was reported to be the second largest stage in the country, surpassed onlyby the Hippodrome in New York City.

Decorations included a stage back curtain depicting a colorful Italian suburban scene, a paneled gallery partition with a fan-shaped stained glass window at the top, fluted iron columns under the graceful horseshoe gallery, frescoed wall panels and a frescoed, domed ceiling depicting the Muses. Two curved stairs provide access to the gallery.

Heating was accomplished by warm air ducts; perforations in the plaster ceiling provided ventilation.

Dressing rooms, a "drop" room and a carpentry shop were located under the stage.

Other floors include offices and Lodge meeting rooms, all still in use. Also still in use is a large banquet hall. The various floors are served by a main staircase, an elevator and fire-stair tower. Adequate fire-exit doors and fire escapes exist. There is a full basement under the building.

in December of 1871, Wilmington could finally boast of an excellent theater for public entertainments. The stage was reputed to be the second largest in America. Following a gala opening "Promenade Concert", John T. Ford booked a series of performances by Caroline Richings and her Company.

Other famous performers who played on this stage throughout its history include Mlle. Carlotta Patti,Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Davenport, Madame Janauschek, Mrs. James A. Oates, Edward A. Sothern in Our American Cousin, Edwin Booth, Edwin Forrest, Maude Adams, Ethel Barrymore,Chauncey Olcott, George M. Cohan, Junius Brutus Booth and Joseph Jefferson. Sarah Bernhardt was scheduled to appear in Camille but was forced to cancel because of small advance

President Ulysses S. Grant attended a "Fair" held in the opera house under the auspices of Company A, First Delaware State Volunteers, on February 6, 1873. Local musical organizations such as the Millard Club (later the Philharmonic Society), the Tuesday Club and the Wilmington Dramatic Club performed Gilbert and Sullivan operettas and oratorios in the house.

The annual balls of the Washington Steam Fire Engine Company were held there on Washington's birthday. Extra trollies ran to the opera house for all these events.

In 1889 Lieutenant(later Admiral)Robert E. Peary spoke in the opera house on the subject of the Arctic region and his search for the North Pole. The State Republican and Democratic conventions were also held in the Grand. It was also the scene of numerous flower shows and lectures on religion and temperance. The first motion picture in the Grand was projected by an Edison Vidascope on February 8, 1897. In 1906 a motion picture projection booth was constructed and movies were shown on a regular basis. By 1914 they had completely replaced live performances. Warner Brothers took over management from 1930 to 1967. The theater was again reopened for weekend movies in April of 1969.

SIGNIFICANCE (continued - 2)----8.

Throughout these hundred years the building has continued to serve as the central meeting place for the Masonic Lodges in the area.

To commemorate the opening of the opera house a "Centennial Gala" was held on December 22, 1972. The event served to test public support for renovating the opera house (which now shows second run movies on weekends) and once again making it Delaware's center for the performing Judging from the turnout for this event and a subsequent lecture arts. by James Reston, there is overwhelming interest and very substantial public support in preserving and restoring this Delaware landmark.
