DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Dinglewood, long described as built like an Italian villa, has been referred to as an example of Victorian jig-saw ornament on an Italianate house by Frederick Nichols.

Without dispute, the three-storied home shows a definite Italian influence, further enhanced by the statues of Spring and Summer on the wide veranda that circles three sides of the house; the statues of Fall and Winter in high niches in the wide entrance hall; and by the carrara marble mantles in the two left parlors.

Joel Early Hurt spared no expense when building his home, rejecting the first set of plans after the lumber had been hauled and the building begun, as not grand enough for his wife.

Mr. Hurt brought slave-labor to lay the pebbled walks, similar to Italian walks, to hammer the stones into a concrete bed, laying a pattern of palm leaves with his initials in the center.

The house, built during the prosperous time of the South, featured a water-works system and private gas works, both expensive and rare.

At the front of Dinglewood, a classical revival entrance with Corinthian columns in antis is used in the favorite Piedmont arrangement with simpler Doric entablature on the facade of a house in the Italian villa style.

High, French windows with arched frames and shutters open onto the veranda. A number of low windows and a cumpla provide ventilation. The wide mahoghy stairs in the entrance hall circle up to the second floor. Molded plaster cornices near the ceiling and carved archways, as well as beautiful frescoes, were supervised by a Mr. Fuber, who lived on the place in order to oversee the work.

The large front and back parlors and dining room featuring high ceilings and frescoes, open into one another on the left. The original heavy, gilt mirrors over the mantles are still in the parlors, as well as several pieces of the mahogany and rosewood furniture.

A detailed floor plan showing dimensions is enclosed.

Miss Frances Adams, whose mother was also a Flournoy, inheirted Dinglewood from her first cousin, Julia, and Miss Adams left it to Annie Hind, her friend. The house has since been purchased by Lloyd G. Bowers, III in 1950. The owners of this house cooperate in every way to make it available for Pilgrimages, etc.

Several treasures from the early days of the house's history such as Col. Colquitt's sword, Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte's sword, lapis lazuil cuff links featuring the famous "Napoleonic Bees" and a diamond necklace, are still in the house.

ought to have built his home around 1859, with thought of expense.

The architects were Barringer and Morton of Columbus, who were listed in the City Directory in 1859.

Mr. Hurt built the house for his wife, Frances Flournoy Hurt. and his only child, the legendary Julia Hurt, who was a famous Georgia beauty.

Dinglewood and its acreage, which was originally about 20 acres, was the scene of the marriage of Julia and Captain Peyton Colquitt, of a famous Georgia family, during the time of the War-Between-the-States. Julia donned her riding habit as her goingaway costume, and rode to Virginia with her husband. attained the rank of Colonel, Colquitt was fatally wounded at the Battle of Chicamauga, leaving beautiful Julia a young widow with no children.

It is reported that Julia and her mother lived in Paris during the remaining war years, as did other men of distinction, such as Gen. Robert Toombs and Gen. Beauregard.

Julia's beauty attracted the attention of Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, great-nephew of the Emperor, who had been a classmate of Peyton Colquitt's at the U. S. Military Academy at West Point. However, she spurned him in marriage, remembering the fate of Elizabeth Patterson of Baltimore, who had married the Emperor's brother, Jerome. (Miss Patterson's marriage to Jerome was never recognized by the Emperor, although U. S. law and Pope Pius did. Jerome had to do as his brother bid. leaving "Betsy" and his young son, and marrying Princess Catherine of Württemberg, for Their son, Charles Paul, was recognized the sake of the State. as the Emperor's heir.)

Julia Hurt Colquitt later married Lee Jordan of Macon, Georgia, who is reputed to have been the wealthiest man in Georgia.
