This is a grand house of magnificant propertions. It is set back from a dead-end road in a clearing amidst trees. This is not the original site; the house was moved in 1966 from where it stood, eight hundred feet to the east on Route 9A, behind a white fence and large trees. It was saved by the present owners when the Catholic Church which owned it needed the land to build a parish house. The granite foundation and brick chimneys were moved with the structure.

The dominant feature is the large oval light in a spider web pattern in the upstairs hallway. In the center of the spider web is an eagle. The entire window opens by sliding upward into the casing. In the spandrels of the panel containing the window is a carved wood fan motif. Below the window is a portice with a triangular pediment supported on four Roman Doric columns. The bases of these columns are very thick granite blocks. The frieze of the portice has triglyphs and metopes and mutules are abundant on both the raking and return cornices. The doorway is flanked by pilasters on both sides of the sidelights. Here the bases are large blocks of wood. The semi-oval fanlight above the doorway is repeated in the sidelights whose muntins create small half-ovals. Flanking the entire center bay are pilasters matching those at the corners of the house. It is an imposing and well-proportioned facade.

The gable ends present three wirdows rather than the expected two, substantiating the impression of size one gets upon first sight. Here, as on the facade, the window headings on the first floor are extended to a flat cornice. At second floor level they extend to the plain frieze. Cable ends are treated as bediments, with flush boards and fanlight. There are mutules here too on the raking and return cornices. Behind the mutules around the entire frieze is a row of beading. The cornice is well-articulated with the mutules and beads and forms a stong horizontal element to complement the vertical emphasis of the pilasters. In total, the house shows "a sophisticated and well-developed design incorporating all the best characteristics of the Federal idiom in a restrained and coherent whole."

The interior has many striking features, particularly the mantels of the eight fireblaces and the pediments over the doors. All are different. The mantels in the front parlors are both very decorative; it is said that the two builders, Bush and Silliman, competed in the carving of them. Bush carved the north mantel and Silliman the south. Elsewhere, mantels are decorative, even in the bedrooms of the second floor. The pediments above the doors are all different, their friezes being pulvinated, containing leaded glass, miniature modillions or dentils. The ceilings are very high and in the front hall is an oval design in bas relief with swags and beads.

¹John O. Curtis, Director, Curatorial Department, Old Sturbridge Village.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Pratt House was built in 1820 by Abram Mitchell, a wealthy local man. It is said that Mitchell's father had bought large amounts of Continental money at a low price so that when it was redeemed he became wealthy. He gave to each of his two sons fifty thousand dollars—it is reported that Abram lost his endorsing a note. His intention was to build the house for five thousand dollars but at its completion it had cost ten thousand. It is sometimes attributed to Colonel Samuel Belcher; Talbot Hamlin, in Greek Revival Architecture in America suggests the possibility. It is known that Samuel Cilliman and Fenner Bush were the builders and that it was Silliman's first job after his apprenticeship. The mantels in the south and north parlors were done by Silliman and Bush respectively, and are very different. The bas relief, carvings, beading and moulding on door and window casings show great care in design and craftsmanship.

The house is named for its most prominent owner, Dr. Ambrose Pratt/
When he married Julia M. Spencer in 1844, her father, George Spencer, gave them the house. Ambrose Pratt was born in Saybrook on July 11, 1814, attended Yale Medical School and graduated from Columbia Medical School in Washington D.C. in 1843. He became well-known for his practice of hydropathology and used the house for a sanitarium known as the Chester Water Cure. In 1846 he went to Milwaukee but returned to Chester in 1853. From 1862 to 1863 he served with the 22nd Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers. His descendants lived in the house for many years. Recently it belonged to the Catholic Church, who, when it needed the land for expansion, sold it to the present owners, sensitive people who value the house greatly. The great grand-daughter of Dr. Pratt lives across the street from the present location of the old house and still takes a great interest in it.
