Of the many covered bridges once to be found on Wisconsin's highways, the old covered bridge on Cedar Creek in Ozaukee County is the last one to survive. When a new bridge was to be built to replace it a decade ago, the people of Ozaukee County considered the old covered bridge of sufficient historic significance that they decided to build the new bridge parallel to the old one and to preserve the covered bridge as a part of their own and Wisconsin's heritage. The bridge was retired from vehicular use in 1962 and is now the main attraction of a small county park on Cedar Creek. It is used both for pedestrian traffic and for sheltering picnic tables.

The architectural significance of the covered bridge has been certified by the Historic American Buildings Survey. When the State Historical Society of Wisconsin planned a covered bridge for erection in the 1890's village at Stonefield, they patterned it after the old covered bridge on Cedar Creek.
