DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Portland City Hall rose from its ashes. The previous city hall, on the site of the present City Hall, completed in 1862, was burned in the Great Fire of 1866. It was reconstructed in 1867 by designs of Francis H. Fassett, Portland architect. In 1908, it burned again. So much damage was done that the building had to be removed.

The present Portland/City Hall was designed by the New York architectural firm of Carrere and Hastings, assisted by local Portland architects, John Calvin I and John Howard Stevens. The impressive building was inspired by the New York City Hall, built 1803-1812. The cornerstone was laid in 1909; the building dedicated in 1912.

The City Hall fills almost the entire block bounded by Chestnut, Congress and Myrtle Streets and Cumberland Avenue. It is built in a "U" shape. The open side of the "U" is the main facade, facing southeast toward Congress Street. The building is 225 feet wide and about 135 feet deep. The 110 foot center of the facade is recessed 55 feet to form the "U". At the right rear of the building, along Myrtle Street, is a 150 foot long and 125 foot wide wing which houses an auditorium. The City Hall is four stories high and has a full basement. The tower is about 200 feet tall and can be seen from everywhere in the city. The granite for City Hall came from North Jay, Maine.

The main facade of the Portland City Hall is symmetrical. The details are tightly organized; the surface is kept quite flat. The recessed center are projecting wings frame a large entrance space which focuses on the recessed section of the facade. The first floor level is raised above the ground level. The entrance platform in front of the recessed section is approached by wide stairs directly in front or by narrow stairs and a platform along the inside face of each wing.

The recessed section of the facade has five bays. On the first floor are three arched portals which lead to the main entrance. On each side of these portals is an arched window. On the second floor are five rectangular windows with projecting, alternating arched and triangular pediments. The five third floor windows are simple squares. Above a dentil cornice and balustrade, five fourth floor dormer windows project from the roof.

Similar windows are found around the wings of the City Hall and down the sides: Square basement windows, arched first floor windows, rectangular second floor windows and square third floor windows which alternate with solid plaques of the same size. The wings and sides have no balustrades. The basement and first floor levels are rusticated.

The tower rises from the center of the recessed section of the face. The square base has a round window in each face. Above, a balustrate ri open arches flanked by columns supporting a square section with a clock

7. DESCRIPTION

The three entrance portals have wrought iron gates. The center one is topped by the phoenix and dolphins of the seal of the City of Portland.

The interior of the Portland City Hall has been excellently maintained. The public space remain the size they were originally and are handsomely painted. The main part of the City Hall houses the city offices and departments. The rear wing contains a public auditorium which seats 3,000 people and is used by the Portland Symphony Orchestra and for other concerts and events. The auditorium has been recently repainted and gives a splendid appearance. The auditorium contains the Hermann Kotzschmar organ, in 1912 the second largest organ in the world. Cyrus Hermann Kotazchmar Curtis, Portland native and editor and publisher of the Saturday Evening Post, gave this memorial to Hermann Kotzschmar, Portland music instructor, composer and organist.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE	· · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · · ·	····

When the Portland City Hall burned in 1908, a plan was put forth to build the new city hall bordering Lincoln Park with other new city, county and federal buildings, greating a municipal complex. The city voted against this plan and the present City Hall was erected on the old site, one block from Lincoln Park. The county and federal building were grouped around the park. Today these few blocks in the center of Portland form the heart of the city. Currently a new police station is being erected at the eastern end of Lincoln Park. Important new building is taking place first to the south - banks, offices, hotels, a convention center. The Portland City Hall because of its central, high location and tall tower, is the focal point for this whole district.

The Portland City Hall is an important example of the work of the firm of Carrere and Hastings. John M. Carrere is quoted as saying he would rather have his reputation rest on the Portland City Hall than upon any other building he designed. The auditorium is excellent acoustically. The interior and exterior of the City Hall have a grand scale. The facades achieve an elegance because of their restrained detail. The entrance space in front of the City Hall is large and impressive; it creates a real transition between the street and the building. The Portland City Hall asserts itself today, maintaining its own unusual importance among new compeditors.

The citizens of Portland use their City Hall for government and for entertainment. It has become a real part of their lives.
