DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Conduit Road Schoolhouse, which faces Northeast on MacArthur Boulevard is a one-story one-room clapboard building with a brick foundation. It is a simple rectangular structure, with a recent small addition on the southeast corner of the back. It was designed by a District of Columbia government architect and reflects bare mid-Victorian style typical of government schoolhouses in the late 1800's.

The gabled roof of the building is covered with asphalt tiles and has a small brick chimney at the rear.

The schoolhouse is 27'5'' across the front and 40'5'' long on the sides. The front of the building has entry ways near either corner with doors measuring  $2'9'' \ge 6'10''$ . Each entry has a small three-paned window above the door. A circular vent is located on the front side close to the roof peak.

The sides of the building each include four evenly spaced shuttered windows, 3'3" wide by 5'6" high. The windows are double hung, each six paned. The rear of the building includes an entry on the northeast corner with a door measuring 2'9" by 6'10". The schoolhouse is painted beige-pink with beige trim.

The interior presently houses a collection of children's books in French and Spanish and is used for language classes for children. The building is not fully restored as a one room schoolhouse appeared in 1874, though it does have period desks, lighting fixtures, blackboards and an original school clock.

The Conduit Road Schoolhouse stands on the sidewalk, six feet from MacArthur Boulevard, a heavily travelled city street and commuter route. Northeast of the building is the Palisades Park and directly across MacArthur Boulevard is an arm of Battery Kemble Park.
