BANNISTER HALL

Standing in the midst of a large arboretum, Bannister Hall exhibits a five-bay frontage to the northwest. The main body of the structure measures forty-one and a half feet by twenty-six and a half feet, and is two-and-a-half stories high. To the rear of the main portion is a two-story wing. The entire building is of frame construction, originally resting on brick footings; later a basement was dug, the footings now being supported by splayed brick retainers. The main portion is covered by a hip roof, and capped by a Victorian cupola. Exterior details include scroll brackets under the eaves, half-height windows near the attic floor level, and a hip-roofed porch stretching across the frontage.

The interior of the house is centered on the hall, which provides communication to the main rooms, second floor, and rear wing. To the northwest, the entry is edged by a stained glass transom and side lights. The stairway, along the northeast wall, is a straight run without landings. Surrounding the hall is a varnished, embossed wallpaper wainscot. To the southwest of the hall is a large, two-bay parlor, filling the depth of the main body. In the southwest wall a fireplace with marble mantelpiece is centered, and a bay window extends the south corner. To the northeast of the hall, the depth of the house is divided into a front room and a rear office. The detailing, throughout the main portion of the house, is rather simple, though executed in deep relief. The wood used in the trim is pine, painted to appear as rosewood.

The second floor is disposed into four square main rooms, accessible from the hall. In addition, the front end of the hall is given to a smaller storage room, and an additional principal bedroom occupies a portion of the rear wing. The east room contains a bath and an enclosed stair servicing the attic. The attic, unfinished, contains a 2,000-gallon cistern, fed by rain water.

The rear wing contains two first-floor rooms: a front room, now used as a dining room, and a kitchen. Through an enclosed, straight-run stair, access is given to two servants' rooms, backing the main bedroom to the front of the wing. To the extreme southeast of the rear wing is a summer kitchen.

BAYNARD HOUSE

Located to the rear of Bannister Hall, the Baynard House stands two stories high, one room deep, and three bays wide. To the main brick portion a lower frame wing, two rooms in length, has been added, apparently in two stages.

The brick portion is composed of a main room with flanking south hall. The main room is belted by a chair rail and features a simply detailed fireplace with flanking cupboard and enclosed winding stair.

erected in Delaware.

In 1865 John Anthony of Troy, New York declined an offer to stand as a gubernatorial candidate, and moved to Delaware to grow peaches. Since John Anthony was a building contractor, all the materials, including the weatherboards, balusters, woodwork, and plumbing, were cut and fully prepared in Troy. After their arrival by freight cars, the members were erected on waiting foundations outside of Smyrna in The house and lands have been inherited, in turn, by James Anthony and William Anthony, the present occupant and owner.

To the rear of Bannister Hall stands a modified Resurrection Manor style house with a corbelled brick cornice. This brick house is dated about 1750 and is believed to have been called Baynard House or Fox Hall. According to family legend the Fox Hall estate became Bannister Hall in 1886, when family illness required the placement of two railings on the stairs in the main house.

Bannister Hall is locally famous for a large grove of trees surrounding the house. John Anthony began the arboretum by planting an avenue leading to Bannister Hall. Since then, both James and William Anthony have added to the collection. The park now contains over one hundred species, of both foreign and local origin.

7. DESCRIPTION - BAYNARD HOUSE (continued) ---

The second story is disposed into a rear hallway, north front room of two bays and a single-bay south room. The attic remains unfinished, and the dirt-floor basement is enclosed by stone rubble foundation walls.

On the exterior the front, or northwest, facade is laid in Flemish bond with five-course common bond below the first floor level. The entry, located in the south bay, is surmounted by a rectangular light and spanned, as are the windows, by a header brick lintel. A corbelled brick cornice distinguishes the front and rear facades.

The northeast and southwest gable walls are laid in common bond, and each features two attic windows symmetrically placed. The north facade is capped by a chimney.
