DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (If known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Mayo Foundation House is located at 701 Southwest Fourth Street in Rochester. The mansion was designed by the Minneapolis architectural firm of Ellerbe and Associates. This three story, forty seven room stone mansion with a central tower of five stories was completed and occupied by Dr. and Mrs. William J. Mayo in 1918. The exterior of the mansion is faced in sandstone except for the third story which is faced with stucco and half timbers. The Tudor architecture and cut stone construction combine dignity with graciousness in a setting of informal gardens several blocks from the Mayo Clinic.

Rising above the main entrance to the mansion is a five story tower. This tower was built at Dr. Mayo's request and is reminiscent of the tower in his parents' home where his mother followed her hobby of astronomy. The fourth floor of the tower contains Dr. Mayo's study. Dr. Mayo's amusement room occupies the fifth floor of the tower. During his residence this room contained his favorite amusement -- a billiards table.

Main entry to the mansion is gained through three sets of double doors. The doors are constructed of mahogany and shaped in a tudor arch motif. The two outermost doors contain leaded glass panels and the inner door, which leads onto the main reception hall, retains more ornate decorative stained glass panels. To the right of the main entry is an elevator which leads from the main floor to the fifth floor of the tower. The walls of the reception hall are constructed partially of white carror marble and partially of walnut veneer panelling. The most dominant feature in the reception hall is a very ornate player organ, built into the wall.

The formal living room -- large enough to accommodate meetings of seventy persons --, the dining room, and William J. Mayo's private library -- which contains 1500 volumes of Dr. Mayo's personal books -- are all accessible from the reception hall. In addition to these rooms the main floor contains an extensive kitchen, pantries, sunrooms, and closets.

A mahogany balustraded staircase, which contains ornate scrollwork, leads to the second floor. The second floor contains bedrooms and sitting rooms besides closets, baths, and sunrooms.

The third floor consists of one great hall known as Balfour Hall. After the Mayos gave their home to the Foundation, the third floor ballroom was panelled in dark New England oak and decorated with hand carved emblems of medical schools. The ceiling is thirty feet high and over ninety feet in length. The hall was named in honor of the late Dr. Donald C. Balfour, second director of the Mayo Foundation. At one end of this great hall is a grand fireplace and at the other is a stained glass window. This window, installed in Balfour Hall in 1943, depicts 2000 years of medical history. The four panels of the left-hand light trace the course of medical education with representations of outstanding men, institutions and events. The center light is similarly devoted to medical practice and the right-hand light to medical research. Each horizontal level of panels is concerned with one particular era of medicine, thus emphasizing the interrelation of medical education, practice and research. EE INSTRUCTIONS

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In 1916-1917 Dr. William J. Mayo built this large, two-and-one-half story house with a central tower of five stories. This mansion remained his official residence until 1938, when he gave it to the Mayo Foundation to use in connection with its program of medical education and research primarily "as a meeting place for the exchange of ideas for the good of mankind."

"Few men have been more honored in their lifetimes than the Doctor's Mayo of Rochester, Minnesota, who pioneered in the so-called 'new surgery' that began to develop rapidly in the last decade of the 19th century. William J. Mayo was the second son of the pioneer doctor, Dr. William Worrall Mayo. William J. and his brother Charles received training from their father that was both thorough and covered almost every aspect of medical practice. The Mayo brothers went to medical school as a matter of course. "Dr. Will" received his degree from Michigan in 1883 and "Dr. Charlie" from Chicago Medical College in 1888. After graduating from medical school the two brothers joined their father in the successful practice of medicine in Rochester.

"Much of the success of the Mayo's was due to the fact that they kept abreast of new advances in medicine and new developments in surgery. The developments of antiseptic procedures by Joseph Lister revolutionized the medical profession. The Mayos were among the first doctors to take the appropriate protective measures and firmly establish the proper germkilling procedures."¹

The "new surgery" developed rapidly, and the Mayo brothers were the first doctors credited with the private clinic concept. Certain elements had been present in the Mayo method of practice from the beginning, but not until 1914 had there appeared "a complete clinic, including laboratories, housed under one roof, and independent of any hospital." "While the idea of group practice was not a new one -- cooperation of a sort among clinicians, surgeons, and laboratory men existed in municipal, state, and local hospitals -- the Mayos were the first to apply it to the private sector and in doing so they changed the course of medical history."²

7. Description

Of particular note throughout the entire mansion is the beauty and craftsmanship of the oak and mahogany woodwork, and the Mayo's vast collection of art work, including a Frederic Remington sculpture and a Charles M. Russell painting. Many of the original furnishings have been retained, and the house offers rewarding insights into the personality of the man who with his brother made unique contributions to the practice of medicine and to graduate medical education and research.

The Mayo Foundation House, as it was named in 1938 after Dr. William J. Mayo and his wife gave the mansion to the Mayo Foundation in order to provide ". . a meeting place where men of medicine may exchange ideas for the good of mankind.", is in an excellent state of preservation. It is used by the Foundation for medical meetings, dinners, and various educational activities. The educational activities centered in the Mayo Foundation House reflect the wide-ranging endeavors of contemporary medicine. Apart from these uses, the house stands as a reminder of the heritage of excellence and service to mankind from which the Mayo institutions derive continuing inspiration.

8. Significance

In 1919 the Mayos assured the continuation of their work by forming the Mayo Properties Association and transferred to it all the buildings, medical apparatus, and other fixed assets which they had owned as senior partners. In 1932 the brothers resigned from the Clinic's board of governors, ending all semblance of Mayo domination.

Few men were more honored in their lifetimes than the Mayo brothers. Dr. William J. Mayo received thirty one honorary degrees, served as president of the American Medical Association as well as most of the other major medical fraternities and societies in this country. He along with his brother are best remembered for the organization they created rather than for the surgical skill they possessed. Today the Mayo Clinic is still considered the largest and most successful private practice in the world. It is also the largest graduate training center for medical specialists.
