DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Old U.S. Post Office and Court House in Aberdeen, Mississippi, is an impressive two-and-a-half story building in the Victorian Romanesque style embellished with Gothic and Classical details. Constructed of red pressed brick and grey stone with natural terra cotta decoration, the five-bay building faces north from its situation on the southwest corner of Hickory and Commerce streets in the commercial center of Aberdeen. Originally three bays deep, the Old Post Office and Court House was enlarged in 1931-32 with the addition of a sympathetically designed three-bay, two-story wing to the rear (south) of the original block.

The exterior surface of the building is divided and subdivided on all elevations by a variety of decorative string courses executed in brick and stone and punctuated by hood molds which follow the contours of radiating voussoirs above the round-arched windows and doors. The first floor level of the principal elevation consists of a five-bay arcade, the center three bays of which form an entrance loggia supported by stone pilasters and double columns with capitals carved in a low-relief foliate design. Four terra cotta masks mark the arch junctures above the column and pilaster capitals, and decorative cast iron lightposts flank the stone steps which extend the width of the loggia. Two of the three round-arched doorways which originally formed the main entrance behind the loggia arcade have been converted to windows, leaving one stillfunctional doorway centered between them. The carved stone capitals featured at the main entrance are repeated as impost blocks in the one-bay east entrance frontispiece, a massive brick composition with exaggerated corbelled brackets supporting a stone cornice.

The horizontality emphasized by the repeated string courses and arcades of the building's exterior is offset by the strong vertical statement of three prominent gables-two centered on the east and west elevations, and the major one asymmetrically positioned on the facade. Each of the three gable faces is divided into three segments by stone string courses that join stone cornices as they rise from carved stone base finials to more delicate peak finials. At the third, or half-story level, all three gables feature a row of closely spaced round-arched windows, above which three louvred rectangular openings serve as attic windows. The triangular peak segments of the gable faces are ornamented with inlaid terra cotta tiles on the facade and east elevations, and with rows of molded brick on the west.

Except for some original details, the interior of the Old Post Office and Court House is largely a reflection of its twentieth century growth, albeit with almost no real structural alterations to the original fabric. The first floor of the building houses a public lobby separated by counters from a large postal operations area that was extended with the 1931-32 addition. A staircase rises to the upper floors along the east wall, and a small stair behind the main one gives access to the finished basement which houses offices as well as storage and utility rooms. In 1962, the main stairway was enclosed and an elevator was installed adjacent to the stairwell. The second floor is occupied by the courtrooms and major offices, some of which still have their original cast iron mantels and other decorative fixtures in spite of some general remodelling at the time of the 1931-32 courtroom wing addition and a major renovation of the main courtroom in 1962. Additional offices, enhanced by their round-arched windows, occupy the third, or half-story level of the building.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

1885-1887, 1931-1932

SPECIFIC DATES

Prominently situated on the main thoroughfare in Aberdeen, the county seat of Monroe County, Mississippi, the Old U.S. Post Office and Court House has visually dominated the town's commercial center since it was completed in 1887. The massive Romanesque Revival structure still stands as the architectural grand finale of the Aberdeen business district, marking the point at which Commerce Street changes from a typical late-nineteenth century commercial row to a tree-shaded residential boulevard as it moves west through the town. As an imposing specimen of a late Victorian style of architecture that was only rarely adopted for Mississippi buildings, the Old U.S. Post Office and Court House possesses more than local significance. With only a handful of other public buildings statewide,¹ the Aberdeen structure links latenineteenth century Mississippi architecture with the vanguard of American academic architecture of the period.

Construction of a federal building in Aberdeen was authorized by a Congressional act of March 3, 1885, which created a new eastern division of the North Mississippi Judicial District and established its court in the Tombigbee River town that had been the county seat of Monroe County since 1847. On June 30, 1885, the United States government paid $4,000 to C. C. Heisen and wife for "Lots Nos. one (1) and two (2) in Block No. Eighty-five (85): Making altogether a tract fronting one hundred and thirty (130) feet on Commerce Street . . . and fronting one hundred (100) feet on Hickory Street" in "that part of the town of Aberdeen . . . known as New Aberdeen" (Deed book 47, p. 475). By September of that year, the site had been approved and a sketch of the proposed building prepared, according to the annual report of Supervising Architect Mifflin E. Bell to the Secretary of the Treasury (p. 9). By the time of Bell's next annual report, dated September 30, 1886, the plans for the building had been approved and working drawings made (pp. 4-5). On October 4, a contract for labor and materials to cost $54,748 was entered into with the firm of McCarthy & Corbett;² and by September 30, 1887, Bell's replacement, William A. Freret, was able to report that the "building has been erected, work on interior finish is now in progress; bids invited for heating apparatus." The original act of authorization had limited the cost of the building's construction to $75,000, but according to all local sources, the final cost exceeded the limit by about $15,000. It is safe to assume that Mifflin E. Bell, who served as supervising architect until Freret's appointment in the summer of 1887, was largely responsible for the design of the U.S. Post Office and Court House in Aberdeen, whether or not he actually drew the plans for the structure.

The Old Post Office and Court House Building continued to function as originally intended until 1974, when the post office, federal court, and U.S. government offices were moved to new quarters. The abandoned structure was declared surplus property by the General Services Administration, and on August 8, 1975, title to the property was transferred to the Monroe County Board of Supervisors (Deed book 226, pp. 51-53). Plans to renovate the building and adapt it to house the facilities of the Monroe Gounty Chancery Court, Board of Supervisors, and Superintendent of Education, are presently being implemented as part of a larger Monroe County American Revolution Bicentennial project entitled "Preservation and Renovation of Monroe County Courthouse Buildings, Aberdeen, Mississippi." The project is financed with Title X funds released by the U.S. Department of Commerce. In its new capacity, the Old U.S. Post Office and Court House Building in Aberdeen will once again serve the public as an important judicial, governmental, and social center, and a local architectural landmark will be preserved for the future.
