Origina1

South Orange Village Hall was to be a building of unique design, fashioned after German half-timber architecture. The first story was to be constructed of molten brick with trimmings of red brick and the upper story with gables and clock tower will be of wood, finished in the interior in red and black plaster and woodwork. "The dome is to be of natural copper, surmounted by a belfry roof with copper and from which the flagstaff will rise. A large town clock and bell will occupy the tower. The roof will be of block slate, with flashings and finishings of copper. The arched main entrance will be trimmed with terra cotta." (New York Times, October 14, 1894).

On the first floor were all the major offices while quarters were provided for the fire department on the east side.

A main hall on the second floor functioned as a meeting room for official functions and social gatherings.

South Orange Village Hall

The Village Hall was built in 1894 using numerous forms. It has brick masonry walls, with stucco walls with wood elements to represent half timber construction on upper levels. The roof is slate. Architecturally it reflects medieval half timber construction. An octagonal clock tower rises at the corner and is tapped by a copper dome. The building mass is interrupted by numerous projecting gables, dormers, a tower, second floor overhangs, etc., presenting a continuously changing facade. Patterns are varied from one gable to another; windows vary and walls are on different planes. The intricacy of details gives the building a human scale.

The interior is simple and probably never had much detail or interest. Painting and the addition of modern fixtures have continued to diminish the interior interest. The interest lies in the profussion of medieval details on the exterior.

A color post-card shows the original cupola with bell atop the dome in 1906. This document in comparison with the present edifice shows few other exterior alterations save the enclosure of the three arches at the main entrance.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Government

The Village Hall in South Orange has functioned as municipal offices for the community since its construction in 1894. (The official village seal is a line drawing of Village Hall.)

Following the Civil War New Jersey witnessed an exodus of people, generally effluent, into the rolling farmlands surrounding Newark. In their vigorous attempt to escape the city these people flowed into the Oranges via the recently developed railroad. By 1869 South Orange Township had developed so rapidly that a separate municipality was formed. Named South Orange Village this is still New Jersey's only incorporated village.

It was not until the late 1800's that South Orange residents seriously considered the construction of a permanent town hall. All of the official offices of the village were housed in the hall as they are presently.

Architecture

Using numerous forms South Orange Village Hall was fashioned after German half-timber architecture in the late 19th century (New York Times, October 14, 1894). It is of unique design reflecting medieval half-timber construction and has maintained its original exterior form to the present.

The building was designed and built by Rossiter and Wright, Architects in 1894. It is a good possibility that the firm was that of Erick K. Rossiter (1854-1941), a New York Architect, who designed a number of public buildings in the Metropolitan New York - New England region. (Biographical Dictionary of American Architects, p. 528-9).

8. Architecture

Erick K. Rossiter, a native of Paris, France, was educated in the United States and trained at the Cornell University School of Architecture. He began as a draftsman in New York and later was employed as an architect for a number of firms. In the last quarter of the 19th Century he was working independently.

From 1881 to at least 1894 Rossiter and Frank Ayres Wright paired to form the architectural firm of Rossiter and Wright. A number of Rossiter and Wrights' drawings were illustrated in the architectural texts of the period. Most noteworthy texts were Cottages by Arnold William Brunner (New York: 1884, plates I, XV, and XVIII), Modern Architectural Designs and Details by William T. Comstock (New York: 1881, plate 68), and American Cottages also by William T. Comstock (New York: 1883, plates VI, VIII, XVI, XIX, and XLII.)

While almost nothing is known of Frank Ayres Wright, other than his partnership with Rossiter, three books were prepared in the late 19th Century under Wright's name.

Architectural Perspectives for Beginners was written solely by Wright, suggesting a possible educational affiliation.

Another book Architectural Studies (Parts 1-10) was edited by Frank Wright, but is usually catalogued under the publisher and major contributor, William T. Comstock).

The final publication was printed as an advertising agent entitled Rossiter and Wright's Modern House Painting. Selling for $5.00 this book was advertised in Combstock's 1883 American Cottages.
