DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Originally the Jim Moore Place consisted of nine log buildings, a root cellar, an orchard, and agricultural fields. All of the buildings were constructed of logs hand-hewn with a broad axe. The first building was the dwelling house which was constructed in 1898 by Jim Moore and C. E. Churchill. The remaining structures were constructed by Jim Moore over a period of approximately 15 years. The walls of the log buildings are in good condition, while the condition of the roofs ranges from collapsed to deteriorated. If the roofs are reconstructed, the buildings, including the root cellar, would be in very good condition and would not be adversely affected by normal weathering.

Alterations to the buildings were minor and done after Jim Moore died in 1942. John Wenzel installed a sink in the dwelling. He also ran pipes underground from the two creeks to the dwelling, thus eliminating the need to hand carry domestic water. Summer Woods added a door and built interior partitions in the hay barn.

With the exception of the orchard being neglected and the agricultural fields not being utilized, the condition of the site and its environment is largely unchanged from when Jim Moore lived there. A frame privy building was constructed after his death. The building has collapsed. The only other change to the environment is the replacement of the ferry with a pack bridge in 1952.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Jim Moore Place is the only remaining relatively unaltered example of a lifestyle that is rapidly disappearing in the Salmon River country. That portion of the Salmon River canyon which lies between the Nezperce and Payette National Forests was settled in the late 1890's and the early 1900's. At that time, the only method of ingress/ egress was by foot or horse; even today there are only three roads leading into that approximately 100-mile long portion of the canyon. Rugged self-sufficiency was not a cliche but the way of life for these early settlers.

These early settlers developed a lifestyle which was attuned to the unique climatic and geomorphologic features of the canyon. The canyon is an ideal place to live because it has a long growing season, fertile soil, and water for irrigation. Like the other early settlers, Jim Moore subsisted by growing vegetables and other foodstuffs, raising chickens, and hunting. He obtained money (necessary for utilizing the pack trains) by periodically conducting placer mining and by selling vegetables and liquor (made from fruit grown in his orchard) to the miners working in the nearby mining districts of Dixie and Thunder Mountain. This seemingly good life is tempered by the isolation of the canyon resulting from the dearth of easily accessible roads or trails. The prohibitive freight costs charged by the packers meant the early settlers either did without many things considered essential elsewhere, or manufactured their own substitutes.

This lifestyle exists in the area but in a highly modified form. At the places which are still inhabited along the river, supplies are brought in by either boat or airplane (or by motor vehicles for those few by the roads). All of the early settlers are dead, only the Jim Moore Place, of all the early places of habitation, has not been extensively modernized and/or commercialized. This period of early settlement in the Salmon River canyon is an integral part of the history of Idaho.

Jim Moore never officially homesteaded his place; rather he located a placer mining claim on it on September 10, 1900. He named it the Slide Creek Placer. After his death, owners of the claim were Francis Zaunmiller Wisner, Bert Rhodes, Summer Woods, and John Wenzel. The Forest Service contested the claim and in 1966 it was declared to be void ab initio. The Forest Service now administers the site for its historical value.
