Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The James B. Simmons House is a two-story frame Queen-Anne and Neo-Classical styled residence located on two city lots in Toccoa, Georgia. The structure was built by E.L. Prater for James B. Simmons in 1903.

The exterior of the structure contains a variety of wall surfaces: a brick foundation, horizontal weather boards on the main and second floors, terra cotta detailing in panels, and vertical boards in projecting bays. The structure also contains a variety of window forms: straight-topped, round-arched, and oval-shaped. A one-story porch of Neo-Classical styling is supported by Ionic columns and wraps around three sides of the structure. This porch, once rounded at its northwestern corner, was altered to its existing rectangular shape in the 1970's. This alteration appears to be the only major change made to the structure. An outstanding feature of the house are the decorative bays and projecting walls. The most elaborate bay located on the west facade extends from the dining room and contains four windows topped by stained glass transoms. A bannister is located above this bay and encircles a recessed bay with three windows. The roof is slate and is hipped with high and multiple pitches. The roof overhang is slight. Four tall chimneys project from each corner and are detailed with molded brick.

The structure is built on an irregular plan. Oak paneling and woodwork is used throughout the house. At the entrance a large room, sometimes called a living hall, is paneled in oak with oak pilasters and Ionic columns. The front door is made of leaded glass. This hall has an impressive brick fireplace with an arched opening trimmed in terra cotta. Fireplaces in the parlor and dining room are also elaborately carved. From the hall, a staircase rises to the second floor. A large arched and stained glass window and two leaded glass windows light the double landing stairs. In addition to the hall, parlor, and dining room, there are two bedrooms with bath, a kitchen, and a conservatory on the first floor. The second floor contains four bedrooms with two baths and a sleeping porch.

The landscape surrounding the residence is simple. The 100' x 100' lot is grassed with several hardwood trees. A retaining wall of brick and stone has been built around three sides of the lot. The lot is adjacent to Toccoa's business district with the 1906 Stephens County Courthouse directly across the street.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

The Simmons House is significant in the areas of architecture, commerce, and local history. In architecture, the Simmons House is a combination of styles and an intact example of designs which were popular at the turn-of-the-century. The structure is a combination of Queen Anne and Neo-Classical design. The majority of the features on the exterior—asymmetrical massing, variety of wall surfaces and window shapes, tall chimneys of molded brick, projecting walls and bays, and the irregular plan of the interior—are elements of Queen Anne design. Neo-Classical inspiration is seen in the wrap-around porch supported by Ionic columns and the classical detailing on the interior. The structure is also significant in architecture due to its association with E.L. Prater (1872-1950), a local craftsman and the builder of the structure. Prater was a master builder in the Georgia Mountains area. His commissions include private residences as well as public structures. In his building career, he constructed the Walters-Davis House (1906) and the Stephens County Jail in Toccoa, a bank in Taylorsville, and Candler Street School (1911) in Gainesville. The Simmons House is the earliest structure known to have been built by Prater. In terms of commerce and local history, the structure is significant due to its association with James Ballenger and Antionette Moseley Simmons. James B. Simmons (1867-1928), who came to Toccoa in 1876, became one of Toccoa's most influential citizens. He was a pioneer in banking, in the mercantile business, and in the manufacturing of furniture. In the publication Men of Mark in Georgia, Simmons was called one of Toccoa's most valuable citizens. Antionette Simmons, wife of J.B. Simmons, was also a prominent figure in Toccoa. She was a leader in the Methodist Church of Toccoa in Sunday School and Missionary Society activities and was also one of the organizing members of the Toccoa Women's Club. These areas of significance support property eligibility under the National Register Criteria A, B, and C.

Stephens County was established in 1905 from land formerly in Habersham and Franklin Counties, and Toccoa, which had been chartered in 1873, was selected as the county seat. James Ballenger Simmons (1862-1928), who was born in Rabun County, came to Toccoa in 1876 at the age of 14, apparently seeking his fortune in the newly-created town. After arriving in Toccoa, he found a job in a department store and in a year he became a full time clerk. At the age of 21, he went into business for himself and established the Simmons Mercantile Store, a business which operated for twenty years. Mr. Simmons also entered the furniture business. Timber was plentiful so that the manufacture of kitchen safes and cupboards by the Simmons' company was a success. By 1893, Mr. Simmons owned two furniture factories in Toccoa and eventually expanded his factories into Atlanta, Hartwell, and Rome. In addition to his furniture holdings, Mr. Simmons organized the first bank of Toccoa - the Farmers and Merchants Bank - and served as the bank's first president. He was also involved in a number of other activities within the community.

Mr. Simmons built two homes in Toccoa, both of which still stand. The first, a Victorian cottage, was built around 1884. His second house, which is the structure proposed for listing, was labeled as a mansion by the townspeople. This large two-story asymmetrical Victorian house is located at the corner of Tugalo and Alexander Streets on Lots 9 and 10 of Block 27.

Lot 9 was one of the earliest lots to be purchased in the town of Toccoa. This lot was bought from the town's founders - Doyle, Sage, and Alexander - by Alfred Price in 1873. Price constructed his residence on this lot. In 1893, Price sold Lot 9 and his residence, referred to in the deed as "the house where Price now lives," to A.Y. Davis and Robert Davis. Davis and Davis sold Lot 9 to James B. Simmons in 1900. The Price home was apparently still standing at the time of this purchase since the deed notes that the property is "known as the Alfred Price house and lot."

According to Mrs. J.B. Bond, the daughter of James B. Simmons, her father had planned to construct the second family residence in a rural setting but due to objections from his wife, who was afraid to live in an isolated area, the house was built in a location adjoining the town center. The house, planned for the more spacious country acreage, was apparently too large for one lot so it was necessary for Simmons to purchase the adjoining lot. This lot, Lot 10 in Block 27, was purchased by Simmons from W.C. Mason in 1903. In that same year, the Price house was apparently torn down and the large Victorian residence constructed by E.L. Prater, a local craftsman, hired by Simmons. Simmons was also the owner of Lot 5 in Block 27 which contained a barn, accessible from Lots 9 and 10 by an alley that was located in the middle of the block. Lot 5 was eventually sold and the barn apparently demolished. Lots 9 and 10 with the Victorian residence remained in the ownership of the Simmons family until the daughter sold the property in 1975. The structure was converted to law offices, a use which continues into the present. The county courthouse, built in 1906, is located across Tugalo Street from the Simmons residence. Other structures adjacent to the Simmons residence are of later construction, making the Stephens County Courthouse and the Simmons residence surviving elements from the early twentieth century.
