Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

Situated on a hill at the head of Main Street, Damariscotta, the Baptist Church dominates the surrounding village. Designed in the Greek Revival style, the rectangular building has a pedimented gable end and steeple supported on six Ionic columns. The timber frame church has clapboard siding on the sides and flush-board siding on the principal (west) facade. An above-ground basement story elevates the church and contributes to its monumental siting. The tower has classical pilasters at the corners of both stages.

The Baptist Church underwent a major remodelling in 1891 when the windows and doors, which were originally Gothic, were altered to the Colonial Revival style. Lancet arched windows were changed to round arched while each lancet arched door received two consoles and a classical pediment. Above the entries round windows were also added. Attached to the rear of the church is a two story wing erected in 1967.

Statement of Significance (in one paragraph)

Standing out clearly as the architectural centerpiece among the mid-nineteenth century brick commercial buildings which reflect Damariscotta's proud history as a seaport and shipbuilding town, this imposing white Greek Revival church with its unusually spaced columns is also a symbol of the establishment of political independence for the community.

The Damariscotta Baptist Church was organized in 1819 as "The Second Baptist Church in Nobleboro" one of the large early political divisions in Lincoln County of which the village of Damariscotta was then a part. The vestry was built and dedicated in 1837 and construction of the church begun in 1843. In 1847, the year of its completion, the name of the parish was officially changed to the Damariscotta Baptist Church in recognition of the incorporation of the community by the State Legislature as a separate town. This was to become effective after March 15, 1848. The church building became the site of the official organization of the town on March 22nd of that year.

Of additional interest is the fact that the building in its exact proportions and unusual column arrangement is virtually identical to the First Congregational Church in neighboring Wiscasset which was designed by the noted architect, Samuel Melcher, of Brunswick. Although no documentation exists, the evidence clearly suggests that Melcher was also responsible for this handsome structure.
